Dear Julie:

"Yours to hand"---words we don't often get a chance to offer you. But then, time is time!

Sure pop, you may let go in any direction at the little bouquet party in preparation for me in April. So be in good voice.

The auditorium in which you will speak on both occasions is an attractive modern room, seating 3500, and with good acoustics, for any speaker who does not try to swallow his voice. The audience will be those of Louisville who are interested in literary matters, as well as the educational force: they will likely overflow it, as was the case last year.

Mrs Johnston is to read her remarks. That is left with the speakers--some of whom will do one thing and some the other, I fancy. So now you are full armed.

Alice and I will be in New York for a brief spell in March, as we now think. Be prepared to unfold all these mysterious doings we have been hearing of.

Ever affectionaltely,

Cale
