Dear Mr. Blossom:

I like your suggestion and will see at once what I can do about it. I have always felt that he was developing a new kind of leadership in the country, something mightily needed, that if he could carry this on he would make a vastly greater contribution to stability, understanding and an intelligent co-operation between private and public affairs than he or any man at the moment could make as President of the United States. So you see I would attack the suggestion con amore.

I will let you know what I am able to do.

Very sincerely

Mr* Young.
