ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE, MEADVILLE, PA., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER

We desire to offer a word in explanation of some changes in this issue. We have endeavored to make this department of the paper interesting, and have found it almost impossible to do so if it was confined to the ordinary range of college editorials. Nothing is duller than advice, and it is no wonder that the student occasionally tires of being told that he should join a literary society, take advantage of the instruction in elocution, etc., etc. For this reason we shall no longer consider the student merely as a member of certain classes, but as a citizen of the world, and interested in the doings of his neighbors. But lest we should be suspected of heterodoxy, we wish to assert our loyalty to the time-honored subjects for editorial animadversion, and we do here and now assert that it is our firm conviction:

That we should have a new gymnasium;

That hazing should be done away with;

That the library should be open afternoons;

That every student should enlist in the battalion;

That all persons indebted to the Campus should pay up.

Having set forth our belief in these matters, we shall now feel at liberty to treat such topics as seem important with a conscience void of offence before college and students.

Within a year many a man famed for the writing of books has looked over his last proof-sheet. Errors and all, the book of life goes to to press, leaving no more time for revises. Tennyson, Whitman, Curtis, Whittier, Renan, all these are great names, and now comes the news that M. Taine, the man who has written many histories, has gone to sleep while the iron pen wrote Finis at the end of his own.

A Frenchman by birth, like many others of his race he has strong claims upon the gratitude of Americans. Perhaps his History of English Literature is not read as much as it was ten years ago, but if others have seen further than he, it was by standing on his shoulders.

He taught Englishmen how to understand their own literature. He recognized the fact that behind every book was a man, and that the man was largely the product of his environment. Instead of merely marking off periods of literary activity and giving biographies of distinguished writers, he endeavored to explain how it was that there were periods at all, and why they possessed such distinct characteristics. He taught us the reasons why England was now a nest of singing birds and now a stagnant fen over which theological mists hung thick. He traced the influences of race, climate and government in determining the character of an epoch, and, best of all, wrote a history which is as interesting as a novel.

There are two things particularly worth noting in regard to Cleveland's inaugural address: one that he said and one that he didn't say. In speaking of the currency question, he refers to the perilous over-confidence caused by our prosperity, and warns us that in spite of our confidence in our national strength and resources, "Even these will not allow us to defy with impunity the inexorable laws of finance." This is the same note that was sounded in his famous letter in which he refused to support the free-coinage scheme. It means that there will be no reckless experimenting with the currency if the President can prevent it.

The other matter, which is conspicuous for its absence, is the state bank issue. The inaugural was a carefully-prepared document; it was written with the advice of the Cabinet; at the very beginning the President announced his intention of indicating his views on topics of present importance; he discussed the currency, paternalism, retrenchment in national expenditure, civil service reform, trusts, the negro question, Indian affairs, the tariff—but not a word of the "wild-cat bank" scheme.

What does this mean?

Simply that on this head the people have nothing to fear, for as Cleveland goes, so goes the party.

As usual the Athletic Association will send its men down to Pittsburgh. Will they make the usual failure? In the various events there are about 160 points. If Allegheny got her share, we ought to shout ourselves hoarse over some thirty points gained by our men. Last year we got six; the year before none.

To-day a college is known by its athletes. Camp and Stagg have a national reputation, while the best Greek scholar in Yale is scarcely known outside the class room. We may not think this is right, but we cannot help admitting it is true. College athletics have taken the place of the Olympic games. It is no temporary craze, it is a substantial fact, and college authorities are forced to realize it. Do we intend to keep up with the procession? If so, we want to get to work with a trainer as soon as we can, for to quote the words of our president, "The kind of muscle that is developed in April for use in May is not the kind that wins contests."

If that overworked angel who keeps tally of the transgressions of college students were asked to name the bright particular sin in which Allegheny's sons excelled, he might give it in a single word: fault-finding.

The spirit of evil is always abroad among us, and just now it is manifesting itself in the form of hasty and unjust criticism. The college in general, the library, the buildings, the faculty, the trustees, each in turn is slashed into by Herr Critic; sadly he croaks of the good old times, dolefully he prophesies the speedy downfall of all things. But the wonder of it is, that in spite of his repeated assertions that he does not consider the institution fit to train up an educated pig, he continues to come back term after term, is graduated at last, and boasts of his college education the rest of his life. He does not himself believe what he says, he finds fault simply from the perverseness of his own heart, but unfortunately people do not understand this, so he is apt to do considerable harm.

We admit that sooner or later students are bound to discover that the faculty is composed of mortal men ; we are familiar with the terrible shock which attends this discovery, but neither then nor at any other time have we any sympathy with a fellow who takes delight in picking flaws in men who are far above him, who criticises things of which he is ignorant, and who can find no worthier occupation than running down the institution which he attends.

If you are quite satisfied that your mental shrubbery would grow more luxuriantly in some other locality, transplant it by all means; but as long as you are here it is neither profitable nor respectable to decry everything from the unswept walks to the president's skull-cap.

It is a pleasant custom of European tourists when visiting the grave of a great man to cast a stone upon the tomb. In this way a rude monument is erected by those who would do honor to the memory of the departed hero. In our college to-day we have chosen the same mode of honoring our faculty—but we forget to wait until they are dead.

"No one can be a member of fraternity and be a Christian." Such, we are informed, is the kind of gospel that an itinerant pulpit-pounder of the college is spreading among the rural population. If this is true, we would like to ask the gentleman why he belongs to an organization that pursues the same ends, in the same manner, as the fraternities do ? Further, if these societies are such cesspools of iniquity that no Christian can abide the stench of them, how does it happen that their members are often studying for the ministry and prominent in Christian work ?

But we always hold the most decided opinions on the questions we know the least about, and this remark of an important member of prepdom is no exception to the rule. We simply call attention to it as an illustration of the fact that the truth does not always come out of the mouths of babes and sucklings.

The state inter-collegiate athletic association had a lively meeting in Philadelphia the other day. One of the most important measures was the adoption of the "Swarthmore rule." As amended it reads as follows :

"A student shall compete five years and no more, but no student shall compete on one college team who has ever competed on a similar team at any other college, and no student of a professional department, or special course, shall compete until he shall have been a student in that college one calendar year."

The University of Pennsylvania men objected most strenuously to the passage of this measure, and when they were outvoted, they formally withdrew from the association.

The rule is substantially the same as the Yale undergraduate rule, which is causing so much discussion in college circles. Its effect is to shut out outsiders, who matriculate only in order to play on the team, and old players who keep on for years after graduation. Under the old rule there is nothing to prevent a college from picking up a team composed of professionals from all over the country, matriculating them for a term, and sending them out as "our college team."

Literary.

The Allegheny Literary Society.

There is a great temptation to follow the example of some old men who are continually telling of the good old days when they were young. Perhaps it might not be uninteresting to those who have neither time or inclination to look into the matter for themselves, to have laid before them a page from the history of this famous society so closely connected with the college.

In looking over the old records many things of interest are found. The society was founded in 1820, shortly after the college was established, and for several years was burdened with a long conglomerate Hebrew-English name which of itself would make the existence of a society very precarious, even though the members of the faculty took enough interest in her welfare to become members.

In 1833 the present name was adopted by the society in order that it might be identified more closely with the college. At that time the advantages of membership in a literary society were so well appreciated by students that instead of having to be implored with tears and supplications to join, they handed in their requests with all the formality of a modern student petitioning the faculty for permission to take forty-nine recitations per week besides drill and tactics. Also in marked contrast with some of the later members, they expected to make use of the advantages offered and to pay for them. In order to show the zeal of the members at that time, note that the sessions began at 5 p. m. (no specifications as to time of closing) and were held every week in the year. There were no adjournments then for shows, lectures, etc., which at present often make the securing of a quorum a difficult matter. Members were compelled to attend regularly or if convicted of a breach of the rules were under the necessity of seeking a more congenial atmosphere elsewhere. The President was exempted from performance but read an essay at the beginning, and delivered an oration at the end of his administration. Surely he could well have been allowed non-performance under such conditions.

All this occurred in the good old days when co-education was still a debated question; and it was a rule of the society that, excepting the regular members, no one could attend except the faculty and honorary members. What would have been the feeling of these to-be pillars of the republic if they could have looked sixty years in the future? The co-ed. question has been so long and so well settled that we cannot even imagine.

Among the questions brought up for debate are some curious ones, as, "Was the discovery of America beneficial to mankind?" Many were significant of the events passing at that time, some of which have shaken the country to its very foundations. Among these are the question of chartering a new national bank, which agitated political circles during the administrations of Jackson and Tyler; the tariff of '42; whether railways should be granted lands and subsidies; the slavery question, and the fugitive slave law.

A long list of honorary members appears several times. It would give one a cramp to transscribe all the names. Those of Daniel Webster and Thomas Ewing are the most noted. We are at a loss to know why such a long list of names was kept on the books, or, if there was any advantage in it, why they did not elect all the great men of the country honorary members.

Of the actual members there are many who have won fame for themselves and have brought honor upon the college by their achievements. No doubt their society work aided greatly in developing the intellects which brought honor to their owners in after years. Bishops Waugh and Thoburn and the late Prof. M. B. Goff are notable examples. An interesting incident is recorded in the minutes of the meeting of Dec. 2d, 1865, when Bishop Simpson, one of the most powerful preachers the United States has ever known, and a trusted friend of Abraham Lincoln, acted as speaker. We can almost imagine we see some of the present speakers bishops, or at least sextons, some sixty years hence.

A resident of North Carolina has at last discovered a novel way of endowing a college. His proposition is to ensure the lives of fifty men, between the ages of forty and fifty years, for $10,000 each, and then as the policies are collected convert them into a fund for the college in question. That would mean a clear endowment of $150,000.

A Tonic

Dr. EPHRAIM BATEMAM, Cedarville, N. J., says of Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

"I have used it for several years, not only in my practice, but in my own individual case, and consider it under all circumstances one of the best nerve tonics that we possess. For mental exhaustion or overwork it gives renewed strength and vigor to the entire system."

A most excellent and agreeable tonic and appetizer. It nourishes and invigorates the tired brain and body, imparts renewed energy and vitality, and enlivens the functions.

I SUFFERED with CATARRH for years, and tried all kinds of medicines. None of them did me any good. At last I was induced to try Piso's Remedy for Catarrh. I have used one package and am now entirely cured.—PHILIP LANCREY, Fieldon, Illinois, June 22, 1892.

Lives of great men oft remind us
Honest men don't stand a chance;
The more we work, there grow behind us
Bigger patches on our pants.

On our pants, once new and glossy,
Now are stripes of different hue,
All because subscribers linger
And won't pay us what is due.

Then let us all be up and doing,
Send your mite, however small,
Or when the snow of winter strikes us
We shall have no pants at all.

"Seeing is Believing."

And a good lamp must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Sad to relate, the society after so long a course of usefulness declined from her former glory a few years ago, and since that time but little work has been done till the present year. At the beginning of last term several members who had the interests of the society at heart and who believed that her days of usefulness were not yet ended, set to work to place her on a more solid basis, and as a result Allegheny Literary Society again holds her old-time place at the head of the literary organizations of the college. A large number of new names have been added to the roll and many changes made in the rules of the society. The old constitution, which had been in use many years and was unfamiliar to the newer members has given place to one more simple in its provisions, and with a larger field for amendment. The old and pernicious system of seniority has been laid aside, and instead of having as officers the older members who already understand the rules of parliamentary procedure, the new ones are given those places in order that before they have finished their courses they may also have a knowledge of the rules of the society. Also, the society, which was on the verge of financial embarrassment, by striking from the roll the names of those who have not yet paid their dues, has successfully passed the crisis, and has been greatly strengthened. Allegheny Literary Society is to be commended for the manner in which she has vindicated her former reputation. She now offers special inducements to those wishing to get one of the most important things in a college course, practice in literary work.

The Kappa Alpha Theta Fraternity.

Kappa Alpha Theta Fraternity, which was established in 1870, at Asbury University, Greencastle, Ind., has the honor of being the first ladies fraternity. The organization was in some degree an experiment, but its history and growth have won for it its present position.

The fraternity was represented in twelve different colleges when Mu chapter was established in the spring of '81. The charter members of Mu chapter were Iris Barr, Josephine Henderson, Minnie Saeger, Cassia Patton, Jessie Dunham, Alice Gardener and Julia McGrew, thus, at once, making up the mystic number seven. The chapter was organized chiefly through the the instrumentality of several Kappa Alpha Thetas of Epsilon Chapter, Wooster, Ohio, and through the efforts of our three senior members, who were a remnant of a once famous local organization known as The Pleiades. On account of several unavoidable delays our charter did not reach us until very near Commencement time, when our three main supports were about to leave us. As the chapter was yet the merest infant, with no permanent abiding place, and those left behind to set the machinery in motion were still far from being posted on fraternity matters, it was thought best to remain sub rosa for a time.

In honor of the girls about to depart, it was decided to have an initiation before the final separation, and accordingly Miss Cora Staples was made a member. This event was not without some of the charms of stolen sweets, and the participants felt, at least, progressive and were ready to receive another sister, Clara Snyder-Hollister. This time the ceremonies were more complicated, and were held with all mysterious rites in the wee small hours, on the fourth floor of Hulings Hall. Later on several others were added to our ranks until we felt flourishing enough to become known to the outside world. There was not a single pin among us, so we donned the black and gold. Could the result of that sudden appearance upon the horizon of Hulings, with all its attending evils have been made known to us beforehand, and been fully realized, we would probably have remained sub rosa to the present day and perhaps never had any existence at all, for it was far from our intention to cast the Apple of Discord.

In spite of opposition, or perhaps on account of it, the fraternity flourished. Our brother fraternities received us kindly and in various ways made overtures of friendship. As time passed on a committee was appointed to see about a fraternity room. The outcome of it was a lease of the room until recently occupied on the fourth floor of Hulings Hall. It was furnished in a plain, but to us, satisfactory fashion, as almost anything seemed better than no particular abiding place. It was fully appreciated and enjoyed by all, especially as it was not made habitable without an effort and actual sacrifice on the part of some.

It may be interesting to know how the nickname of "The Kats" originated. At one of our meetings a rap was heard and upon opening the door a package was found addressed to "The Kats." It contained a large black cat labeled, "A candidate for initiation." We considered this a joke worthy of some consideration and managed to have quite as much fun out of it as the sender could have had. The advisability of badging it in gold and retaining it as a fraternity pet was discussed but judged impracticable.

This, then, is the humble beginning of our sisterhood in the college, and if its original aims and aspirations have been carried out it must have been the instrument of much good. Like all pioneers, its early members had much to contend with which could not possibly affect an older organization, but if all the pleasures of our fraterternity life were placed in the balance with our persecutions, the latter would be lifted high in the air. But whatever may have been the mistakes of the early days of the chapter, that they are all obliterated by its intervening record, present standard, and future prospects is the earnest hope of

New Books.

Greek-English Word-List, by Robert Baird. Boston: Ginn and Company.

This little book gives a list of about one thousand common Greek words, so arranged as to be readily committed to memory. To read your Homer with your feet on the fender, i. e. not to be burdened with a dictionary, requires a comprehensive vocabulary, and Prof. Baird, of Northwestern University, aims to supply the means for attaining this. Words of similar meaning and those from like roots are grouped together, opposite each being its English equivalent and, in larger type, such English and Latin words as are derived from it. The device is an excellent one as an aid to memory, and the book should prove of much value. A full Greek-English index renders it a convenient aid for the student in prose composition work, enabling him to find words much more readily than in a large dictionary, and having the advantage of showing the distinctions between words of allied meaning.

Prairie Folks, by Hamlin Garland. Chicago: F. J. Schulte & Co.

A wondrous land is that in which Prairie Folks live. A land of waving seas of grain, wide starry nights, June winds and harvest moons. And to Mr. Garland is due the credit of discovering that these prairies raise something else besides wheat, they raise men. Men of mighty stature, simple in their instincts, equally ready for fight or work, true sons of the Vikings of old time; men of low foreheads and evil looks, brutalized by work and dissipation; young women, straight, strong and shapely; old women, aged before their time by the ceaseless round of toil which crushes out a woman's life; odd characters, bits from humanity's junk-shop—all these live and move and speak in his pages. Mr. Garland knows and loves his West. He has lived with its people, felt its poetry, and has given us a book in which all is set down with an eye for dramatic effect and a power of minute description that leads us to hope for high things from his future.

The book is a collection of nine short stories which have appeared in magazine form. They show the same keen observation, vivid description and skill in the choice of expressive words that mark his earlier volumes. He knows not only how to tell a story, but where to stop; and while his work is sometimes uneven, it is

She had no shawl or hat and no shoes, for it was still muddy in the little yard, where the cattle stood patiently fighting the flies and mosquitoes swarming into their skins, already wet with blood. The evening was oppressive with its heat, and a ring of just-seen thunder-heads gave premonitions of an approaching storm.

She arose from the cow's side at last, and, taking her pails of foaming milk, staggered towards the gate. The two pails hung from her lean arms, her bare feet slipped on the filthy ground, her greasy and faded calico dress showed her tired, swollen ankles, and the mosquitoes swarmed mercilessly on her neck and bedded themselves in her colorless hair.

Listen to the rustic philosopher:

Uncle Ethan had a theory that a man's character could be told by the way he sat in a wagon seat.

"A mean man sets right plumb in the middle o' the seat, as much as to say, 'Walk, gol darn yeh, who cares?' But a man that sets in one corner o' the seat, much as to say, 'Jump in—cheaper t' ride 'n to walk,' you can jest tie to."

He shows consummate art in putting an abstract social question in dramatic form. We have long been told that the Western farmer is oppressed and that the Indian has been unjustly treated, but when we see poor Sim Burns doggedly pushing on in his up-hill work, or when the old chief Drifting Crane and his people are again driven to wander, the facts are brought home to us with new force.

The book is a dainty volume, gotten up in the best style of the Ariel Press.

Local.

Are you going home Saturday?

Ladies will not be admitted to membership in Philo.

Plummer was out of college a part of last week and week before, on account of sickness.

The next time you pray, thank the Divinity that at last a wave of athletic enthusiasm struck Allegheny, if only for a short time.

The Kirmess is to be repeated.

"Will some able bodied man knock those two gentlemen down?"

Minchin has been out of school for a few days on account of sickness.

Are you a member of Allegheny? If so, when do you expect to be "fired?"

Philo Franklin will petition the faculty to make literary society work compulsory.

W. J. Merchant has left college temporarily, having accepted a position on the McKeesport Times.

Students who are taking two courses, and are trying to get two degrees, please remember the calf story.

The Phi Gamma Delta boys were at home to their resident alumni at their chapter house last Saturday evening.

The two shares of Campus stock which were offered to the highest bidder, by the K. K. I's, were sold to B. A. Heydrick.

Spring's greatest blessing: The disappearance of snow. For college boys can walk past the North ward school building at ease.

T. A. Douthitt, who has been in Erie most of the winter, has returned to college and will graduate with his class in the spring.

The library became so noisy one day last week that Dr. Hamnett was obliged to remind the boys of the "rule in all libraries, which is—'perfect quiet.'"

The A. C. C. B. boys want every person to know that they have two bath tubs at their rooms. They even quarrel at table about whose turn it is now, seemingly to this end.

Judging from appearances, the college boys are very much interested in the tearing down of the old Nypano depot, and some of the faculty happen down that way now and then.

The A. C. C. B. entertained their lady friends in their parlors last Monday night.

The storm door still stands at Hulings, for the benefit of the hired help—and others.

Dr. Wheeler preached in the First Presbyterian church in Jamestown, N. Y., last Sunday.

Weatherby has heen so rushed with his studies that he has been unable to get to his meals regularly.

We are informed that the base ball club will be strengthened by several good players who will enter college next term.

Pres. Campbell in Philo: "It has been moved and seconded that disputes between nations be settled by arbitration."

For those who have forty-five per cent. in all their studies, college closes Saturday; for the rest it closes Thursday, March 23.

Pickard, being criticised for working his fingers while delivering a three-minute speech in Philo, replied: "I cannot help it. I was born working my fingers."

Astounding, but nevertheless true, that some of our students were born with "amorous propensities," some acquire "amorous propensities," and some have "amorous propensities" thrust upon them.

A party of eighteen from the Conservatory of Music attended the Paderewski recital in Cleveland, last week, Monday evening. Paderewski favored them by playing his own beautiful "Minuet" at their request.

Philo has finally realized her great need of rising out of the mire of indifference and habitual inactivity. She has been so lenient as to give her sluggards one more chance by cancelling all fines against them up to and including March 10th. Hereafter all members not conforming to the constitution respecting fines, will be expelled from the society.

Pratt is on the sick list. The cause of his sickness was an over-dose of a poorly-made mixture of strong butter and molasses.

Allegheny is to be congratulated on her literary work this term. It is to be hoped that Philo may be inspired with the same zeal.

The Seniors are not all agreed to have a speaker represent them on Commencement day. About half wish to have ten chosen from the class, as formerly, to represent them.

The athletic contest under the management of W. U. P., which is to come off soon, is attracting much attention in Pittsburgh. Entries have been made from all over the state and good results are expected.
