Dear Miss Fox:

Thank you very much for your letter. It is good of you to take the trouble to write me about my autobiography, and it is pleasant to know that we have a friend in Georgia Martin.

This is a capital story you tell about Lincoln, and what is very rare, I think so far as I know, a new one, that is, one that has never been in print. Your father was a Kentucky man, I take it. Am I right?

Thanking you again for your trouble in writing me and particularly for this Lincoln anecdote, believe me

Very sincerely

P.S.

Here is the note that I spoke to you about last night, dear Miss Fox. It was a pleasure to see you. I wish I had had a little more time to talk about your father. Will you not be good enough to put on a card his full name - Judge ? Fox.

I have an idea that I might make a nice little Lincoln story out of this incident and if I do before I attempt it I should like to have a little talk with you about your father. Would you be willing to come to tea with me at the National Arts Club for that purpose? I cannot arrange it before Christmas, but probably soon after.

Very sincerely yours
