Dear Mr. Weeks:

Forgive me for troubling you about the manuscript of my Recollections sent to your office some eight weeks ago. I am wondering if it could have miscarried. If not, is there any chance of your giving me an opinion on it in the next fortnight? I am beginning to see an end to what I am writing and want to go about the revision. It would help me to have any comments you or your readers care to make. This, of course, is quite apart from whether or no you find the material anything suitable to The Atlantic.

You are fortunate to have this Ann Bridge novel. There is something approaching enchantment in that first chapter.

Very sincerely

Mr. Edward Weeks
