

216 Maryland Avenue
Northeast
Washington, D. C.

March 12, 1930.

Dear Miss Tarbell:

Will you not kindly file the enclosed letter which I received from Mrs. Key the day after I had written you? I shall feel better if I have passed on to you the word she wished to have transmitted to you. At first, I thought my note of grateful acknowledgment was sufficient. But, I think it might interest you to see a real letter from her herself, so firmly do I believe in your interest in the wrongs of noble women, and, while it is a personal letter and mentions matters that can be of not the least interest to you, the portion which does refer to your letter and her thought on the case is enlightening, I think. You need not acknowledge its receipt.

Sincerely,

Adelaide Borah.

Enclosure.