Dear Mr. Marshall:

Thank you for your prompt attention to my requests - prompt and satisfactory. The answers give me in each case what I was after, and as for the Hair of Areturus I am quite ready to pass it by. As a matter of fact I had already decided it was a little too complicated to use in this first paper - a copy of which I am sending.

This is the article of which I spoke to be used in the little series that I am doing for the Cosmopolitan. They wanted there to touch on the educational developments in industry. I found the Westinghouse system so interesting and stimulating that I was glad to use you as an example.

I shall be grateful if you will go over the paper carefully or have it gone over by the proper person and make any suggestions and of course correct any errors. I am not entirely sure about the spelling of one or two names. I have queried them, also one or two dates. You may find other slips. Please remember, dear Mr. Marshall, that I am not sensitive to criticism. I consider it the life of journalism like competition is the life of trade.

The material on your experience with suggestions as well as that of what women can and have done in your Engineering Department is all grist for my mill. Just how I shall use it I cannot say at the moment, but use it I shall one of these days.

With many thanks for your kindness, dear Mr. Marshall, believe me

Very sincerely yours

Mr. W. G. Marshall
