Dear Mr. Wiley:

In your letter of October 31st you ask me three questions:

1) How much time a day do I devote to newspapers?
2) When?
3) Does the news of public affairs - foreign, national - local - interest me more than departments of so-called "women's interests"?

And here are my answers:-

1) I average at least an hour a day on newspapers, that is I think I do - I never time myself.
2) I go over two newspapers, one of which is the Times, rather carefully every morning with my coffee. After lunch I usually return to the articles and editorials which have particularly attracted my attention for a more careful reading. Sometimes before or after dinner as engagements permit, I glance at the Evening papers.
3) Yes, public affairs - foreign, national and local interest me more than the Women's Department, but I by no means despise them. I consider them as necessary for the great body of women in the business of making homes as the financial news is to men - and women - in the business of making money.

I hope, dear Mr. Wiley, this is what you wanted of me.

Very sincerely yours
