I take it that what must happen between industry or economics, if you want, and politics is something like we are slowly seeing must come between capital and labor - an adjustment, a full admission - that they are inter-changeable, inter-related factors, one not able to live without the other. And that where there is a full understanding of the needs, obligations, duties of each, you get your best result which we are working out in industry, admirably in certain spots. Now the politics and economics must somehow learn to live together, understand each other. This needs interpretors. Mr. Young is our greatest interpretor so far.
