Mr. S. S. McClure,
373 Fourth Avenue,
New York City.

My dear Mr. McClure:

The Macmillan Company who now control my books are very anxious to have a proper transfer of the copyrights on them, which are still standing in the name of McClure, Phillips & Co.

I suppose that you would have authority to sign for the Company, would you not? If you would not, I don't know who would. All Doubleday rights were long ago transferred, but to get the thing cleaned up it seems necessary that McClure-Phillips should do something. I should say that if you sign for the firm and Mr. Phillips did also, it would be all that is now humanly possible.

I shall appreciate it if you will put your name to the enclosed. I am in town only for two or three days as I have still another trip.

I hope you are getting on finely. I have not yet seen your May number which Miss Roseboro is so proud of, but I am going to get it the first time I pass a news stand. All good luck to you.

Faithfully yours,
