Lecture

New York, May 28, 1918.

Mr. C. D. Brooks,
314 First National Bank Bldg.,
Syracuse, New York.

My dear Mr. Brooks:-

I have just come back from Washington where I have been spending the last three weeks on Committee work and find your letter of May 17th, which had been held for me here.

While I was there I received a letter from Mr. Alver asking me if I could fill the Vermont engagement on October 11th. I told him that I could.

Of course, I remember you very well and those first engagements which filled me with fear and trembling, as I never had done any lecturing before. I have stumbled through a great deal since then.

You ask about my subjects. I have four on which I prefer to speak this year.

The Inner Line of Defense.
Our Ally France.
The fear of Efficiency.
American Women in the War.

They all deal more or less directly with the war. I find myself not able to talk on anything else.

Very truly yours,

E.C.
