B.B // after '94 - see if you can find dues cards

In Levine's book of women garment workers is the best description that I have seen of the rise of the clothing trade. Combination which showed itself is here by combination of workers, fighting against low wages and for conditions mainly, also fighting to an extend for ideas, socialism particularly. Here they fought capital without any notion of its relation to industry. A very good stury of the rise of the fashion wave. Levine's analysis of the Hebrew immigration, his theory, mental outlook is good - to be found on page 26-7 and page 68. He says that between 1890-5 the American Labor movement - P.68.

Note what follow this paragraph, the way socialism complicated the struggle and of the entanglements that resulted in various union. All this good.
