A Successful AUC

By the time "The Campus" next appears, the new AUC officers will have come to a close. Looking back, we think that the administration of our student government has been handled as successfully this year as we have ever seen it handled in the four years we've been here.

Most people who are all involved in student government are aware that the job of a president is a no-man's-land of responsibility and leadership. Again and again throughout the year, the AUC president must try and reconcile the often-divergent views of hundreds of students to a plan in an attempt to satisfy everyone. To say that this is a well-nigh impossible task is to make the understatement of the millennium. The students have gripes, the college has policy. The president is in the middle. In fulfilling this command which this year has taken on this type makes, we feel that Tom Gladden has done an excellent job.

The primary task of the president, of course, is to preside over the meetings of the Undergraduate Council, which, in itself, is no mean task. Added to this is the responsibility of appointing and supervising the officers of the executive board. The AUC president, as you remember, is elected from both parties. Student government at Allegheny may still have a long way to go before it realizes those accomplishments that are possible in a body which is led by a forward-thinking presi- dent. Tom Gladden and Vice-President George Cullerson, has established a straight path towards these goals than it has had for many years.

It is my hope that both Jack Burns and Jerry Cotton have gained from the experiences of the 1953-54 AUC and will carry its achievements even further.

Inside Out

By Drummer

Since time immemorial people have been susceptible to the latent fascination inherent in the flaming torches, black shirts and colored boulevards of the general hysteria of a parade. Americans like to think that such events have been done quite, the flags and the drums which are sounded through the streets of Rome, the boulevards of Paris, the alleys of Berlin, and the great cities of America. We believe that we think that they are immune to the influence of mass movements, like those found in Rome, the processions, the Heils to Hitler, and the Pailin Stalis. But we are wrong.

The gangs marching down Brooks drive last Thursday night were, to the casual observer, just a scene from a fifties' teen-culture reenactment. Everybody had fun, but to me it was frightening to watch a kid who was headed out with the frenzied shout. Watching him, I began to understand how the Nazis and Huys and Franco became leaders. Even on a small campus, in a teen group, this type of thing can happen. Let us hope that the vote-getters still count more on election season.

* * *

Thirty years from now, Alle- gnians will look back and appraise level of a maturity expressed in the vote of the Dartmouth men to rid their campus of fraternities with discriminatory classes. Heaven for- bid this college take the lead in a national movement to rid itself of the hated Greek system.

It would be a great service if the editor of this paper would give up trying to be funny and spend more time giving the students some news. I, for one, would like to know how the people in the AUC are doing, and what has been the past year for the College Union is spelt. Chatter boxes can be thrown out of the window, and even those who have nothing to do these days, and even counting in the "modern" furniture. star members of the Undergraduate Council prepared list the CU funds can account for the $5,000 they have received this year alone -- not counting all the dollar sunk in project be- coming known as the " preached.

Publishing such reports should not be too hard for the administrative council and the committee which handles these extended funds.

* * *

It is obviously a small mind that set itself to thinking up the posters designed to lure us into a conversation. Reports by the treas- urer of the AUC, and the presi- dent of the Undergraduate Council can hardly be expressed in the same language as one would tell a vandale- rie performance. Dr. Edwards and Tom Gladden must have had what more respect than Gracie Allen and George Burns.

4 Student Counsellors

For 1954-55 Announced

Ann Bowden, Carol Larson, Ruth MacGregor, and Hannah Rutter were recently selected new student counsellors for Callghy next year. The new counsellors will undergo a training period. The new counsellors were selected by a committee of the president and will divide a purse of $45, the Belle McClintock Fry prize from the estate of John L. Porter.

Thelwell and Thoburn Poster Prize Winners

Dob Thoburn and Corrine Whel- seth tied first place in the Porter Prize Singing Contest held March 31 in Ford. The winners were de- clared by President John L. Porter and will divide a purse of $45, the Belle McClintock Fry prize from the estate of John L. Porter.

Thoburn sang the Prologue from Pagliacci by Leoncavallo and Miss Whelseth's winning selection was "The Round of Pleasure" from La Traviata by Verdi.

Only two pies dropped in the past few weeks--Peter Hertob to Toni Forbes and Chuck Pulfer to July Resch. We are looking forward to the hope business picks up after Easter Vacation.

We hear the Flis Gams held their annual spring tea last Sunday af- ternoon. They had a good crowd of freshman, women faculty members, and Depts. Sounds like a coalition is in the works of a Washington cock- tail party Allegheny Style. But it was fun all the same.

Intriguingly: According to Mr. Thomas Whitney, one of the "experts" among last week's G readers, the women in Russia wear black-bulld-purple- wear, and red. Possibly a sign of the times.

Browning in Reis the other day, we came across the word "STUCK" without ever realizing what it was. We think that this word will be around for a long time.

Harriette Ann Gray Dance Troupe Here;
Two Performances Presented Tomorrow

The Harriette Ann Gray Dance Company will appear at the Playshop on Friday, April 9 with both a matinee and evening performance. Admission for the afternoon performance starting at 4 p.m. will be 50 cents for students, and the price of the 8:45 showing will be 75 cents.

Audiences have found the company’s technique comparable to the artistic dance entertainment they have enjoyed in movies like “The Red Shoes” and “An American in Paris.” Hailed by critics as a group which has contributed one of the most significant developments to the modern dance, the company will stop at Allegheny as part of their third transcontinental tour.

Miss Gray, whose experience has ranged from work in classical ballet to assistant dance director at Columbia studios and solo work in many major motion pictures, will stage an evening of “concert dance” in the group’s appearance here.

The program presented here will include “The Ballad of the Little Sparrow,” in which a mature woman recaptures, for a moment, the vitality of youth; “Saturday Night,” “The Albatross,” a group dance based on the poem by the French writer Baudelaire. Larger group dances include “Folk Suite,” which uses vocalists, and the “The Dux and the Diplomat.” The finale for the program will be the presentation of “Grooved,” which is the dramatic story of a mother’s final effort to dominate the life of her daughter, and tragic isolation of the woman, when the daughter breaks away to freedom with a dancer.

Miss Gray’s versatility as a performer, choreographer, teacher and dance administrator has carried her to the forefront of the contemporary dance scence where she shares the attention of the theatre world with Graham, Bessie, Terman, and others. Leading this southwestern company, Miss Gray has achieved a balance between a definite artistic communication between the dancers and their audience.

The expectation of the outside limits is the second half of the twentieth century. This is when the Soviets hope to bring about the victory of Communism throughout the world... ... in this country, in terms of their foreign and domestic policies, has remained the same through the lifetime of the Soviet Union... We have now what we had before the death of Stalin. In so much as the Soviet Constitution constituted a return to us in 1950, it constitutes promise to us today..."

Thomas Whitney delivered the presidential lecture on "What Goes Inside Russia?" in his speech this evening, said Mr. Whitney, "I would like to give you a little of the feel of Lenin... May 9, 1945, Victory Day, the Soviet government decided to inform the people that the war with Germany — their war — was over. This was thirty-six hours after the rest of the world knew of the end of the war. The celebration began. This was the first and last unpublicized holiday in the Soviet Union. People went out into the streets, wandering throughout the city, feeling how wonderful it was that the war was over. They gathered in Red Square and thousand-thousands of the Russian masses..."

Mr. Kemen's charge affairs in Moscow, made a speech. The crowd shouted, cheered, and applauded. The demonstration went on the next two hours of the evening. This was an expression of their feeling of friendship with the American people, their allies..."

The next scene, Stalin's Funeral... The bier was carried down the main street in Moscow. Chopin's Funeral March was played over the loudspeakers. Many wreaths and flowers followed the procession. The coffin, with the unusual plastic shroud so that Stalin's face could be seen, was placed in front of Lenin's tomb. Malenkov spoke in cold, austere manner. Boris al-drained in his crisp Georgian accent. Malenkov was the last to speak, and he was vastly more touched by the spirit of Stalin, the body that thousands of people had passed to see the image of their late ruler. The meaning was over suddenly and completely. A military march was played over the loudspeakers. The meaning was over..."

Russia is a country of contrasts and confusions. In an age of television, the twentieth century next to the nineteenth century... Wide boardrooms, with over-stuffed, ginger-bread apartment houses and cobble stone side streets bordered by wooden bowels. Three-sided contrasts are relevant to the age. Russian foreign policy is surprising for it reflects these contrasts within Russian society. Mr. Whitney went on to describe the future of Soviet society. He liked their social structure to a pyramid, the bottom consisting of the Soviet masses, the middle composed of the ruling classes, and at the top the ruling caste. He continued by giving a complete description of the classes within these various levels, their way of living, their jobs, and their desires. In depicting the ruling caste, Mr. Whitney stated, "This is a closed corporation of people. A select group... Any Russian would prefer a job with in the party to any other job that he might possibly get, if he is concerned with power. These people have moderate salaries, adequate living accommodations, and a chance to obtain great power over an enormous number of people..."

Among the many conflicts of the USSR is the desire on the part of the government to liquidate the peasantry by transforming them into wage laborers in the countryside.

The passive resistance of the peasant class to this movement, and of the working class to their low standard of living. "And so," concluded Mr. Whitney, "The ruthless heads of state are met with passive resistance to many of their prime goals. And the militancy of the Communist house is met by the lethargy of the masses..."

A panel discussion with the three lecturers followed with Dr. Albert Marlin of the University of Pittsburgh as moderator.

Freshman Committee
Criticizes Rush Week

A poll of the freshmen men has established the fact that a majority of them would like to see some changes in the present system of second-semester rushing.

According to a report made last night to the Interfraternity Council by the Freshman Cabinet Rushing Evaluation Committee headed by Jim Fox, 94 percent of the 80 freshmen who returned questionnaires wanted the present system of delayed rushing completely abolished for reasons such as the awkwardness of not being able to converse with fraternity men in town; the fact that the system does not give freshmen ample opportunity to converse with others who on and off campus; and college spirit is hampered by restrictions on contacts with fraternity men; and the embarrassment of incidents in restaurants and such off campus.

Fear Dirty Rushing

The 5 percent who did favor the present system gave as their reasons the fact that this system is more conducive to study, and their fear of dirty rushing were the reasons.

The formal rushing period was also criticized by 71 percent of those polled who thought that it was not long enough. The same number also expressed the opinion that off-campus activities during rush week did not affect at all the choice of fraternities by the rushers. Only 15 percent said that these activities affected their choice greatly.

The most impressive entertainment by fraternities was the house entertainment said 73 percent of the replies. All but five said that the most informative types of entertainment were informal ball sessions, discussions and skits, all held within the house. The report stated that the “there seemed to be a thought prevalent that if a fraternity had to go outside the house to entertain, it had nothing to show within its own walls.”

Curfew Hours Approved

Curfew hours during rush week were approved of by 80 percent of the men, while only 15 percent wanted later hours and 5 percent wanted earlier hours. “With the exception of three returns,” the report stated, “every freshman questioned desired the IFC to publish more of a general price list for each fraternity.” The poll also showed that 78 percent considered the round-robin inadequate, and suggested more open houses, among other things.
