Dear Julie -

The cards came and I am even so much obliged. Mrs. Martin came in for lunch with me Saturday and we were both happy in making plans for your coming. The only trouble is that the time is going to be abominably short. You have no idea how eager everybody is to meet you and I am afraid

you will be wined
and dined until Jacob and I will hardly see you alone.
Remember you are to stay with us from Sunday until Saturday at least,
and I am clinging to one free day for us
to spend at the cabin
all by our lonesomes.
The plans, so far, are as follows: you arrive on Sunday the 18th, on Monday we are asking Marse Henry and Mrs.

Watterson to lunch informally so that you can have an early opportunity to talk tariff - On Tuesday Mr. & Mrs. Martin give you a lunch or a dinner I don't know which at the East. House; on Wednesday is my reception from 4 to 6, and on Thursday, Mr. & Mrs. Richard Knott, (he is the editor of the Post) give another dinner in your honor. This sounds rather formidable, but we will take it easily and they are all people that you will enjoy meeting.

I am so happy over your coming! We have so many things to show you, and so much to tell you. Let me know what train you are coming on, and Jacob and I will be waiting with open arms.

Yours

Alice -
