Dear Miss Tarbell:

We have now reached the point with our "Old Girls" story where it will be necessary to decide definitely on the title of the book. In your correspondence with Mr. Dennison you have always spoken of the manuscript as "The Old Girls", but I don't think we should carry this on if we can get a better title. This particular one has its objections, because some of the old timers who will read the book, will dislike to be thought of as "old girls", even though the term is used with the utmost of respect. Some of the titles we have thought of as possibilities are:

"The Brunswick Book"

"Old Brunswick Days"

"The Birthplace of Boxes"

"Old Brunswick, the Dennison Keystone"

"Brunswick Builders of Dennison Quality"

Do any of these appeal to you, or can you think of one better? I would like an early word, if possible, since the master copy, which will contain the original drawing of Mr. Adams, is practically ready for the binder.

May I also ask if you will be quite willing to autograph this copy for us when it is finished?

Very sincerely,

H. Dowse
