Dear Mr. Douglas:

Thank you for your willingness to send the photographs which the Cosmopolitan asked for. I hope they can use them, but one never knows what these so-called popular magazines will do to the material for which they have asked. However good their intentions, in the final analysis it is the circulation man who counts and I am not ever popular with him whatever the editor may say.

But I do hope they will use the pictures. It is a good book - that of yours and Mr. Director's which I should like to see widely read.

I am heartened by the interest in Norman Thomas. Not that I am going to vote for him, but he is providing something of the flame that we need as I see things.

Let me second your kind hope that one of these days we may meet. I should like very much to have a talk with you.

Very sincerely yours
