Dear Miss Tarbell:

It must be you who has been kind enough to send me the American Magazine of Late, so please accept my poor tardy thanks and my best wishes for the New Year.

You certainly have built up a very interesting and able magazine while it is very difficult not to read, once in hand, from cover to cover.

Your articles on the tariff make the points of central interest but sometimes I wince under what seems to me rather too keen a lash when you remember that we are all human and with our best struggles under temptation sometimes lose ground. "Vengeance is mine! I will repay saith the Lord" Forgive me this word but you are too valuable and too powerful to become ~~[illegible]~~ bitter and I trust you will live to wipe off every aspersion of that thought from the memory of men - For instance word in this last Jany. number gave me [illegible] reflection upon Mr. Aldrich of whom I know nothing and Mr. Lodge of whom I know something and know him in earnest and true as far as we can see and carry alas! Their labors are difficult and not carried on in selfish or careless spirit - that they cannot see far enough is the fault of something over which they have no control - Just as Sumner in spite of his failings would have been returned to Congress forever [illegible] the people because of his ideal standards for which he was willing to be slain and was slain — so in a lesser degree because Mr. Lodge has been a good man in spite of nonsensicalness Massachusetts will wish him to go to Congress again although a good powerful demagogues are standing across his path and may break him down.

But there are too difficult questions — if I did not value your gifts very high I should not venture to take you from my heart in this way. Believe me yours very truly Annie Fields.
