

October 7, 1930

Dear Mr. Graeve:

I can sympathize with you. My desk is covered with articles from indignant friends and foes. One of their chief arguments is:- "Of course, you were well paid for that article." Another, that your statement - "that you were proud to publish it" will bring retribution on your head. I do not know what we are in for, but it looks a little to me like a drive to upset both our apple carts. However, I am proud of the fact that you are willing to say that you were proud to publish the article. And please do not take the protests too seriously. I am not going to.

All right - the "Double Standard of morality" will march in for your examination sometime late in December, I think.

With appreciation of your courtesy and forbearance in what I have helped to bring on your gentle head, believe me

Very sincerely yours

Mr. Oscar Graeve
Butterick Building
New York City