Mr H. S. Dennison,
Framingham, Mass.

Dear Mr Dennison:

I have revised the "Old Girls" according to the suggestions in your letter. If there is anything further that occurs to you, please let me know. The whole point, of course, is to get it as effective for the purpose as we can.

You speak in your letter of an illustrator. I talked the matter over with an editorial friend of mine who has a long experience, and he suggested John Adams.

Adams is familiar with New England, knows Brunswick itself, and has illustrated New England books for some of the best publishers. He would have the feel of the thing as well possibly as anybody in the business; but before you decide, you better send in to the public library and have them look you up something of his. He does a great deal of line drawing, which I myself like very much and in which, unless special pains is taken, you generally get better effect. I will keep the matter in mind and make any other suggestions that come to me. We can talk it over when I come to the Safety Conference the end of September.

You may send me my check whenever it is convenient.

I shall of course be interested to know whether you think I have caught your idea in the changes that I have made.

Very sincerely yours,
