

Prohibition

January 24, 1930

My dear Dr. Carrell:

In the course of our talk the other night at Mr. and Mrs. Atterbury, I was particularly interested in what you told us of your experiments with alcohol on mice. If I understood you correctly you found that the third and fourth generations, in a family of mice, given regularly small quantities of alcohol, were stronger and brighter than their predecessors. S/

I have been wondering if you have made any report of these experiments. I should very much like to have the information to use in a piece of work I now have on hand - I have been much disturbed about the failure, as I see it, of prohibition, and every now and then have taken my hand in a bit of popular writing. I should like to quote what you told us, using your name, but of course would not think of doing it without consulting you. If there has been a report made and given to the public that would justify me, I suppose, otherwise I should not be willing to use this information which interested me so much without your expressed permission.

Again I say, how pleased I was to meet you again, after all these years. How satisfying to know that there are people in the world like yourself, doing a quality of work that you do. May!

Believe me, my dear Dr. Carrell

Faithfully yours
