My dear Miss Tarbell:

I have just received your kind letter of the twenty-fourth of January. The experiment dealing with the effect of alcohol on mice will not be completed for a year and a-half. No report will be made of it before that time, and nothing has been published on the subject so far, as it is only barely begun. As the results of these tests will be certain only after the completion of the experiment, I shall appreciate it very much if you will not make any mention of it whatever.

In case you would be interested in seeing the Mousery, I should be happy to have you come some afternoon about half-past two o'clock. If you will telephone to my office, Regent 8001, and let my secretary know when you will be free, a definite time can be set for your convenience.

Yours sincerely,

Alexis Carrel
