May 5, 1932

Dear Mr. Burton:

Just a note that I may be sure that I understood correctly about the dates for delivering the succeeding articles in our series.

Since you are not to use the introductory article - The American Plan - until September I am free to deliver its successors at a later date in the month than our written understanding calls for.

I should like to get them off my hands by the Twentieth of each month instead of the Tenth, but under the new schedule even the Thirtieth of the month would be in ample time for your needs, would it not?

I am very glad to have a little more time on the series which enlarges in my mind as I go on.

I am deeply gratified that you and your colleagues like this first article. As I told you on the telephone yesterday I tried out the argument in an informal talk to a strictly private audience, the group of the Pen & Brush. I did this because I felt sure that if there was a loose screw I would get a swift come back, but there was a general approval and one of our members who is in the Columbia business department has been begging me to go up there to repeat what I said. I have written her that I could not think of course of repeating even the skeleton of an article which was to be published in the Cosmopolitan in the September number.

I hope I shall see you one of these week ends at my corner of Connecticut. It is delightful to know that you are so near a neighbor.

Faithfully yours

Mr. Harry Payne Burton
8th Ave. & 57th St.
New York City

Digital Image, 2009. The Ida M. Tarbell Collection, 1890-1944, Allegheny College Pelletier Library