Dear Miss Tarbell:

I am sending you the latest, and I trust the last, revision of "The Real Issue". I has just come home from the typist. Already I am beginning to think that I might have said something more, or siad it better, but I shall not do it with this article. Will you please substitute this for the lod copy, and sonsign the latter to the wastebasket?.

As you know, I am always interested in anything that you write, and I hope that when you shall have read this, and some others of the less objectionable latters that you have received, snf dhsll hsbr given the article inspired by them to the waiting and impatient publisher, you will let me know where to look for it. I hope that we shall get this thing thrashed out some sweet day. It is no use to expect any compromise from the brewers. They are absolutely untrustworthy. That is their long suit. You did wisely to express, in one of your articles, I believe the one in the Woman's Journal, a deep distrust tб them.

I think that you will like the conclusion in this revision much better than in the olk. If the friends of temperance will get together on this platform, and support the government in destroying the whisky power, and if the more radical prohibitionists will leave something to moral suasion and education, and not try to do everything by statute, I think that the matter may be solved.

I hope that you have had a pleasant Christmas, and that the new year will be a happy one throughout.

With kindest regards,

Walter Graves.
