My dear Miss Tarbell:

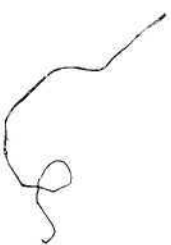

I read with great interest your article entitled "Who is to Prevent Unfair Practices", which appeared in the March issue of Nation's Business you were good enough to send me.

This is a most intelligent discussion of what is one of the vital problems now clamoring for solution. I believe you hit the nail on the head in your analysis of the difficulty with the NRA, and I agree with you that the honest 90 per cent represent "as high an order of fair dealing as can be found in any one human activity."

Of course, I greatly appreciate your reference to my book, "Business and the Public Interest". Your opinion is one of the things I value highly in this life of ours.

My warmest congratulations and thanks.

Sincerely,
