Dear Miss Tarbell:

It just about breaks my heart to confess failure in arranging for serial publication of your very fine book, but the two magazines I had in mind — and which I felt were sure-fire — either have serial commitments so far ahead as to delay book publication beyond a reasonable length of time, or lack space for a feature of this kind.

I still believe if we had had sufficient time in which to move around there would have been little doubt of serial publication.

I want you to know again how much I appreciate your kindness in letting me have a try at this project, and I know the book will have a big and well deserved success.

With kind personal regards and best wishes,

Sincerely

William C. Lengel
