

February 13, 1935

Dear Mr. Mayess

The enclosed, practically a repetition of your letter of February eleventh, seals our agreement.

I feel a little as if I were about to jump off a high precipice not knowing what lies below, but since you have faith enough to think I can make a safe landing I shall do my best to keep my balance and arrive on my feet.

As soon as I get the present burdensome book off my hands I shall begin searching my mind for recollections.

Very sincerely

The enclosed, practically a repetition of your letter of February eleventh, seals our agreement.

I feel a little as if I were about to jump off a high precipice not knowing what lies below, but since you have faith enough to think I can make a safe landing I shall do my best to keep my balance and arrive on my feet.

As soon as I get the present burdensome book off my hands I shall begin searching my mind for recollections.

As soon as I get the present burdensome book off my hands I shall begin searching my mind for recollections.