Dear Miss Ida:

Mrs. Meloney is out of town for a few days, so she has given me the privilege of writing to you. We are still holding our breath and hoping that you can write the article for us in answer to M. Caillaux, giving a woman's point of view on the future of civilization. We have had answers from the point of view of a psychologist by Dr. White, from that of labor by Secretary Davis, and we have in proof another on culture's contribution to civilization by John Erskine. We want to round the series off by yours. I understood from Missy that you could do it for us if we could wait until after July fifteenth.

Give my love to Miss Sara and ask her to be sure to let me know when she comes to town again so that we can have another spree.

I send a great deal of affection to you.

As ever

Mary Day
