Dearest Ida:

What an enchanting interview you had in the paper this morning. I was thrilled first, to know your birthday was about to arrive, and second, I want to say that I felt as though I were having a visit with you. It made me feel how much I wanted to see you for my own pleasure, and I do hope that you can spare me some time very soon.

In the meanwhile, this takes all my love to you. Do be careful over the celebration. Personally, I always worry about 80th birthdays because most people who celebrate them are nearly killed by the devotion of their friends, like one of our old family friends who turned hers into a twenty-four hour party. Please remember what we want is to celebrate with you on your 90th.

As always,

Affectionately,

Anne Morgan
