Dear Miss Tarbell:-

I am greatly delighted with your two letters giving me the information I asked about Pinkerton.

Mrs. Carlton thought that I should have written acknowledging your first letter which I probably should, but that you have taken the trouble to look this up and write me further, pleases me extremely because I felt as if what I was asking was an unjustified liberty. There must be some "art and mystery" about the writers of books as there is said to be in the law that a writer should take so much trouble for a stranger and one who has no right to call upon you.

Thanking you again for your kindness, I am

Very sincerely,

Schuyler C. Carlton
