Miss Ida M. Tarbell,
120 East Nineteenth St.,
New York City

Dear Madam:

One of the most prominent and interesting of the early pioneers in the Northwest was General Andrews. His autobiography covers a very important period in westward development. He was probably the initiator of forestry conservation in this country. His autobiography contains many important sidelights on the prominent men in this country during the latter half of the nineteenth century.

General Andrews had a leading part in the Civil War, the anti-slavery movement, the free-soil party, and reconstruction. His diary throws much new light on conditions during that eventful period.

We enclose descriptive circular of his autobiography published by us, and if of interest to you, we should appreciate the favor of your order.

Yours respectfully,

THE ARTHUR H. CLARK COMPANY
