Dear Madam:

Referring to your interest in Civil War we ask your attention to the publication described on the enclosed circular, which contains considerable important material thereon, most of which is not available in any other form. Dr. Abel's volumes present most interesting and valuable material dealing with the Civil War period of our history. The work depicts a phase of American history hitherto wholly neglected, misunderstood or misinterpreted. Few people realize that the territory held by the Southern Indian Nations was of immense strategic importance in our Civil War, that many of the tribes were slaveholders. The South appreciated the importance of securing these great tribes as allies. The North neglected them until too late.

Because of the valuable material on Civil War you perhaps will be interested in adding this work to your collection of such material and we will appreciate the favor of your order if of interest.

Respectfully yours,

THE ARTHUR H. CLARK COMPANY

These volumes cover a chapter hitherto entirely unwritten in the history of the United States — an important period in our history upon which no satisfactory published account is available. The important part which the American Indians played in American history during this long period has heretofore been entirely neglected or, when dealt with, misinterpreted.

No history of the American Civil War that has yet appeared has adequately interpreted certain important facts connected with that period of frontier development.

As a contribution to the diplomatic history of the Southern Confederacy, it is of even more importance.
