Mc Millan's for April, 1862.

A correspondent from N. York writes that there is no external excitement about war. It is all you hear but business goes on in regimental march by but they are only a part of things - to it (war) has become a matter of sober business. ---

There is no doubt a great deal of mercantile distress --- but work is plentiful and the distress, as yet, has not gone deep down.

Be the cause what it may, there is less appearance of distress at this moment visible in N. Y. than there has been for some months past in London or Manchester.
