The Kaldron '94.
To our Honored Friend and President,

DR. WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD,

This Volume is respectfully dedicated by the Board of Editors.
NOW much is contained in a "point of view"! Memory carries us back to the time when we stood outside the editor's window and looking upon him, wondered at his ineffectual efforts to amuse. Then we saw only glorious opportunities for the display of scintillating wit, and the production of nuggets of wisdom. Now we grope in vain for those visionary gems.

We would ask those taking our former position, to let the rays from the lamp of our experience fall upon them and wait for a change in point of view. It matters little whether the eye peering through the window, look upon the "easy chair" with favor or disdain, the fact remains, that the editors' completed task—the college annual—has a recognized place in the field of literature. What that volume should contain is still an unsettled question. With the hope of making the present KALDRON conform as nearly as possible to the popular demand, every available literary resource connected with the college has been drawn upon. Faculty, alumni and students have so generously responded to our request for material, that we are enabled to number among our contributors some very effective writers.

To aid still further in making this a representative book, every article has been passed upon by the entire board of editors. We believe that by this policy we have succeeded in making the KALDRON of '94 worthy of a place in the world of college annuals at a time "when every book owes an apology for its existence." Conscious of having done the duty assigned us with the ability at our command, and esteeming it a privilege to have been the chroniclers of one year in the history of our honored college, we present to the students and friends of Allegheny this volume.

An Hellenic Episode.

The class was Latin, late the hour,
'Twas almost time for dinner,
But Horace held us hungry there—
He always was a sinner!

The biggest dunce in all the class
Was blundering through the lesson,
If he did get a sentence right
We knew that he was guessing.

At last he reached that famous line,
"Mors omnibus," and so on.
It means that death must come to all,
But when, there knoweth no one.

"Well sir, translate," the teacher said,
With nervous fingers drumming,
"No one can tell," he slowly read,
"When the omnibus is coming."

WILLIAM HENRY CRAWFORD was born in Will County, Illinois, on the sixth of October, 1855. On his father's side his ancestry is Scotch-Irish; on his mother's, American bred, for several generations.

He was educated at the Joliet High School and at Northwestern University, where he graduated in 1884. His theological course was taken at Garrett Biblical Institute. During his college course he took more prizes than had ever been gained by a single student, winning in 1884 the Kirk Prize for Oratory. He was elected from his class by the faculty to membership in Phi Beta Kappa.

After graduation he joined the Rock River Conference and was appointed to Ravenswood Methodist Episcopal Church, Chicago. Two years later he was appointed to Fulton Street Church. In the pastorate the most abundant success was his. The three years' work at Fulton Street resulted in the erection of a new church and in the conversion of over three hundred souls.

From the full tide of success in this pastorate he was called in 1889 to the chair of Historical Theology in Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Georgia. Here he found work that was at once congenial to his tastes and suited to his particular talents. Endowed with fine historical imagination and keen insight into persons and events, having a broad outlook over the whole field of history and ready command of terse and expressive English, he succeeded to an unusual degree in making his subject live and in rousing the deepest interest in his students. Outside of his immediate department he was also active in promoting the various interests of the school.

In 1891 several months were spent in Europe in the study of Church History. In Italy, Germany, France and Great Britain he pursued his investigations and gathered much material for his series of lectures on "Reformers before the Reformation." These lectures on Savonarola, Hus and Wyclif, were first delivered before the Seminary. They soon became known at various Chautauqua Assemblies, and have since been delivered in many of the towns and cities of the country. Popular in the sense that they command the closest attention and awaken the deepest interest in audiences of every character, these lectures contain not a trace of charlatanism and sensationalism which so often characterize the platform utterances of to-day. They depend for their popularity on their solid merit alone.

In 1893 Northwestern University conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

Doctor Crawford has from the first been an active worker in the Epworth League, and was a prominent speaker at the International Convention of the League, held in Cleveland in July, 1893.

Called to the presidency of Allegheny College and assuming charge at the opening of the current year, he was not long in making his presence felt. His one year in this office must speak for itself. Let only this be said: The auspicious omens of Inauguration Day have not proved false, and none of the hopes then inspired have been disappointed. This sketch is history and not prophecy, else much more would be said. What is prophecy now the historian of the future may record.

An executive who unites fine scholarship, deep spirituality, brilliant pulpit and platform powers, winning personality, and wise enthusiasm in planning for the future, he has already gained the confidence and esteem of all friends of the college. With united effort on the part of all interested, there can not fail to be a decided advance in the efficiency and reputation of the institution.
Inauguration of Rev. W. H. Crawford, D.D.,

Ned Arden Flood.

MR. NED ARDEN FLOOD, whose portrait appears on the opposite page, is a resident of Meadville. He spent two years in the preparatory department of Allegheny College and two years in the college proper, thence entering the junior class at Johns Hopkins University, and graduating with the degree of A. B. in 1890.

In addition to his regular work in college he paid considerable attention to elocution, and was prize winner in a declamation contest of the Allegheny Society and also in an Inter-Society contest. He has special talent for impersonation and his original parody of "Spartacus" and its delivery have provoked much mirth. Mr. Flood has been importuned by several of the leading bureaus to register with them, but has persistently declined.

Two musical organizations have claimed Mr. Flood among their leading spirits—the Allegheny Glee and Banjo Club, and the Johns Hopkins Glee and Banjo Clubs.

Every position from office boy to managing editor has been held by Mr. Flood on the "Chautauqua Assembly Daily Herald," a paper published on the Chautauqua, N. Y., Assembly grounds. He has written a number of very able articles for the "American Journal of Politics," and is a frequent contributor to the "Chautauquan" under a pseudonym.

Mr. Flood is a voluminous reader and is constantly in touch with the development of social and economic life. He is a thorough student of political economy and sociology. His collection of books on these subjects is probably the largest and most carefully selected in Western Pennsylvania. Mr. Flood's special study of the labor question and the many problems which have a bearing upon the social condition of labor, an investigation in which he has been engaged for several years, may lead him ultimately to make a permanent addition to the literature of this subject.

In January last he delivered before the students of Allegheny College a course of five lectures on "Present Economic Problems," dealing with the Causes for the Existence of these Problems, Monopolies, the Organization of Labor, Historic Socialism, and Present Day Socialism.

The large publishing business of The Chautauqua-Century Press is under Mr. Flood's supervision.

Since Mr. Flood’s Allegheny College days he has been a member of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity. He is also a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science and the American Economic Association, and is actively interested in the brilliant local club known as the Round Table.

A Souvenir of the Fair.

At the close of the Fair it was found that a child had been left behind in the Nursery. Let it be brought up as the child of Chicago.—Inter-Ocean.

Though her boasts we've long been reading,
There was always one thing needing
To her claim to be the leading
City underneath the sun;
But she has it: it's a baby,
Left her by some thoughtful lady
Who had all she wanted, maybe,
And thought Chicago needed one.

Some may say it's quite erratic
That a city democratic
Should, in transports quite ecstatic,
Aid an infant industry.
But Chicago's young and growing,
Up to date and very knowing,
So to Gotham she is showing
What a city ought to be.

We admit she's enterprising,
But in schemes for advertising
Her ways are past devising,
Lord forgive her for her sins.
For they say that there's a rumor
That Chicago's such a boomer,
If the town had known it sooner,
They'd have had that baby twins.

A Phase of Evolution.

MOST scientists now believe that all life, both animal and vegetable, has developed from the simple cell, and that the higher forms have been evolved from the lower. This is a fine theory, and except that there is nothing in geology to prove it, and that such evidences as are afforded by the present order or state of organic matter are quite inefficient, it can be proved beyond a doubt.

It has always been difficult to draw the line between the lower forms of animal and vegetable life, many animals having the characteristics of plants, and many plants resembling animals in their habits, but it is only recently that it was discovered that in some of the highest orders, what have long been considered animals, really belong to the vegetable kingdom.

Among several instances, the one which seems the most remarkable is that of the well-known genus Homo, species Africanus, which was imported into this country early in the eighteenth century.

Although apparently an animal and for many years classed as such by zoologists, there is now no doubt whatever that he is really a plant; a higher development of the Citrullus vulgaris, or common watermelon of our gardens.

This statement may possibly cause surprise and perhaps doubt at first, but the really thoughtful mind will reflect that many scientific truths now accepted by all, were at one time received with scorn and derision, and before deciding will hear what the facts are which support such an apparently wild hypothesis.

First, it can be proved chemically that the negro is a vegetable and not a human being, as has been so erroneously supposed.

Chemical analysis shows that the main elements composing plant tissue are carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, phosphorus, and potassium. Those comprising human flesh are carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, phosphorus, and sulphur. Plants contain potassium and lack sulphur; human flesh contains sulphur and lacks potassium.

Now, it can be proved that the negro lacks sulphur and is rich in potassium.

One of the tests for sulphur is its bleaching property. It bleaches animal and vegetable substances. If the negro is an animal he contains sulphur and is bleached by it. He is not bleached, hence does not contain sulphur, therefore is not an animal.

He is rich in potassium. "Large quantities of potassium are now obtained by washing wool and then evaporating the water. * * * This substance is excreted in sweat and then absorbed by the wool." (See Williams’ "Introduction to Chemical Science," p. 143.) The negro has wool. Wool absorbs potassium, which is excreted by the perspiratory glands. This substance could not be excreted by those glands to such an extent as to be of commercial value if the body were not rich in it. The body being rich in potassium, clearly classes the negro as a plant.

It now remains to be demonstrated that he is developed from the watermelon. And why should this seem impossible?

Everybody has observed how naturally the negro turns to the melon; why then should the converse be regarded as impossible and untrue? It's a poor melon that doesn't work both ways.

The affinity of the negro for the melon has long been known, but the deep-rooted belief that they belonged to entirely different divisions of organic matter has prevented investigation and accident has once more discovered what the searchlight of science, dimmed by superstition, failed to reveal.
A few months ago in a small village in one of our Southern states a well-known colored man died in great distress, and as he had some of the symptoms of poisoning, and as it had been several days since anybody had been lynched, the citizens of the town decided to have the matter investigated.

Scarcely had the scalpel penetrated the cutis when it encountered a hard substance, and what was the surprise of the surgeon to find that the whole stomach cavity was occupied by an immense watermelon. In fact the supposed human being was found to be only a huge melon with a thin coating of negro.

Since this occurred, every case investigated has shown more or less traces of melon, according to the stage of development of the specimen.

Although at present no living forms or geological specimens have been found representing the negro still attached to the vine, there is no reasonable doubt that the ancients were familiar with this phenomenon. In I Kings, iv:25, reference is made to every man sitting under his own vine, showing that then as now he was considered a human being, although his attachment to the vine clearly proved him to be a plant.

Many allusions similar to that just quoted, once considered figures of speech, under the light of recent investigation are seen to be literal.

Like many other remarkable phases of evolution, this new one is not as yet clearly understood and will probably not be accepted by the popular mind at once. Great truths are long in overcoming prejudice and superstition, and there can even now be found persons who do not believe that the earth is a sphere, so it cannot be expected that everybody will be convinced that the negro is a watermelon.

Should you ask me whence this story, Whence this writing and this fibbing, With the odors of the class-room, With the chill of icy hallways, With the curling dust of blackboards; Touched with gossip of Old Hulings, Filled with fair and studious maidens? I should answer, I should tell you, From the visitors at the chapel, And from various other sources Came this wild and weird tradition; From the alleys, streets and sub-ways, Where the "copper" makes his living, Down among the hungry "Dagos." Once, in Allegheny's chapel, When the shades of night were falling, Met some students. All were brothers, On the night of which we tell you, Phi Psi, Phi Gam, Sig and Theta, And a lonesome brave of Delta, Met there with their feuds forgotten, With their hearts full to overflowing With the prospect of good feeding And oratory far exceeding That of Burke or even Webster. With college yell and joyous laughter, Went these students for adventure, Went to hold their Pan-Hellenic, Went to have a time ecstatic, From the classic hill of learning, From the halls of Allegheny. In the silvery glow of arc light, Danced these Greeks with rhythmic motion; Then they yelled with voice seraphic;
All the Grecian yells were given,
Followed then the Pan-Hellenic;
Shook the arc lights with vibration,
Brought the coppers from the bar-room
Where they drink the hot firewater,
Caused the populace to gather,
Just to see what was the matter.
Then they marched down to the cafe,
Hunger sharpened by their yelling,
Voices tuned for joke and singing.
They " fell to " in sailor parlance
Fell to eating and to talking,
And that feeling soon stole o'er them,
That is common on Thanksgiving;
Full they were unto repletion,
Were these Greeks of Allegheny.
Then were toasts, some sad, some joyous,
Talked they of " Pan-Hellenism,"
Talked of "Dear Old Allegheny,"
Spoke of "Ladies and Athletics,"
Of the "College Publication,"
Of the "Spirit of the Grecian,"
And on many other subjects,
Which we have not space to mention;
And they sang a little also,
Sang of brave, heroic action,
Of a little dog named "Cæsar,"
And of many other heroes.
Then down the street went the collegians,
Sweetly singing, hoarsely yelling,
And they marched to stately Hulings,
Where was built a big bonfire,
Bigger far than e'er was seen there;
And the maidens, fair but frousled,
Like Will Shakespeare's lovely Juliet,
Leaned far out of those dark windows,
And they screamed their " Pan-Hellenic,"
To those brave "lords of creation."

Dancing 'round the fire below them,
These fair maidens, young and winning,
Had with secrecy surprising,
Held their Pan-Hellenic banquet
On the very selfsame evening,
Did not tell a single "frat" man,
Neither brothers, friends, nor lovers,
So that now with brains hysterical,
From this hidden piece of knowledge,
Gladdened they in this achievement,
Proved for-ever-more a libel
That they could not keep a secret.
With their hearts full of foreboding
For the future of these maidens,
Who so well could keep a secret,
Proving false the grave opinions,
Of preceding generations,
Slowly went the Grecians homeward.
Some to quiet, classic, Stringtown,
Famous far in song and story,
To the beauteous bounds of Frogtown,
'Cross the bridge to old Vallonia,
To the place they call Goose Heaven,
Went the heroes of this story.
But our Muse sat by the embers,
Of that wondrous big bon-fire,
Sadly thinking, pensive musing
Of the fleeting joy of pleasure.
Then she slowly took departure,
To her haunt, the old library,
Where the "bookworm" loves to revel,
Where the shades of ancient authors,
In the silent midnight watches,
Love to gather dark and solemn,
And read o'er the musty volumes.
Here our Muse (the wreathed Clio)
Filled another page of parchment,
In the life of Allegheny.
An Initiation Into the American Colony at Göttingen.

IMAGINE to yourself a long upper room with bare white walls; nothing in it but an uncovered oak table reaching almost from one end to the other and surrounded with chairs. This is the place of meeting. By 9 o'clock in the evening there are twenty-seven young men seated around the table, each with a mug of beer before him. Only two or three must be excepted who have bottles of Seltzer water instead of beer. At the head of the table sits the "Patriarch of the Colony," so called because he has been a member of it four years. Presently he arises and presents to the initiates his visiting card on which they notice that the \( d \) forming the first syllable of his name is spelled with a small \( d \). Then bringing the bulky register of the colony and opening it at the pages near the beginning, yellowish with age, he points in silence successively to the autographs of George Bancroft, Edward Everett and Basil L. Gildersleeve. Then he turns to the page at the end of the long list, where the new men proudly add their autographs.

The new members having shaken hands all around, sit quietly listening and observing. The two young men from Georgia, most conspicuous of all introduced because of their southern accent and swagger and their spurred Russian boots with tops reaching above the knee, are talking in rather a loud and rapid manner about dogs, actresses and sword fighting. The beakers standing before them are wooden ones, larger than the rest. A neighbor explains to the uninitiated that the wooden beakers are for Lichtenheimer beer: a sour, bitter variety that is supposed to distinguish the drinker of it as having taken his second degree in Teutonism. The young man from Boston with a gay necktie and a red rose in the buttonhole of his black coat, is an actor's son and a medical student (by reputation only) and, according to our kindly neighbor, his trunk was legally seized last week by his creditors. The mature looking student whom his comrades call Chester A. Arthur, because of his great resemblance to the chief magistrate of their country, is a professor in a Wisconsin college, and on leave of absence. A fine-looking Virginian, proud of the scar across his cheek that he got in a duel in Berlin, pompously calls for another glass of beer every ten minutes or so, and later in the evening repeatedly insists on standing up and delivering with gravity a toast on Georgia Augusta (the name of the university), but he is as repeatedly pulled down by the coat tail by those sitting near him. The new men learn that he is a student in history, having a charming American wife in Göttingen with him who pays all his bills and blames the bad German beer for making her husband so ugly.

But the most distinguished of all in look and manner is the tall young man sitting at the right of the Patriarch. He frequently rises in his place, calls some student present by name, bows low and drinks to him, according to the mode of the \( \text{corps} \) students. All eyes are fixed on him every time he does this, and the admiration on every observer's face is so pronounced that it almost looks like awe. At every good thing that is said or done, many eyes turn to this courtly gentleman to watch the impression made on him. He proves to be a young Russian student, the guest of the Patriarch for this evening. Young America is putting his best side out before young Russia.

In the midst of the babble of voices in noisy talk the Patriarch cries "Silentium!" He announces a beer duel between the new comers, according to custom. He explains to the reluctant novel iates the rules, and will accept no refusal. They must drink a "beer duel." All stand up and an umpire is appointed who fills two glasses exactly even with beer. Then the Patriarch orders, "Trinken Sie aus!" The two duelists grasp each a beaker and resting its edge on the lip, wait for the next order. "Trinken Sie aus!" cries the Patriarch, and they tip up the beakers and swallow down the beer as fast as it will go. One has emptied his glass and set it down on the table before the other is half through. The crowd cries to the slow drinker, "Ah, Bier Junger! Bier Junger!" And Bier Junger is his name the rest of the evening.

About midnight, when many American college songs have been sung and the beer is getting low in the keg that was full when placed in the middle of the table earlier in the evening, a noisy debate arises between a Cincinnati man and the would-be-toaster of Georgia Augusta. The debate warms into a quarrel. The Patriarch, himself by this time rather top-heavy, approaches the dis­ puters and solemnly advises them to exchange cards and settle it in an honorable way. But he too becomes entangled and others join in the quarrel. In an instant there is a scuffle, chairs are thrown over, fists are striking out desperately in the crowd, and beer glasses fall breaking on the floor. One beer glass goes flying past a bystander's head and crashes through a window. The initiates look around them in amazement. The young Russian has disappeared. Chester A. Arthur is nowhere in sight. Likewise all the drinkers of Seltzer water and many more have taken French leave.

This was the first and last meeting of the American Colony in Göttingen for the winter and summer semesters of that year.
I.
The CLEAR moonlight of a June evening reveals a youth seated by an open window. Idly watching the clouds rise above the trees, his mind is more closely occupied in reviewing the events of the greatest day of his life. The morning was spent in practicing his oration, the afternoon in visiting with the boys, and a last trip to the tailors to insure his new suit being sent on time.

The chapel had never looked so well as this evening, thanks to the enterprise of the Juniors; and the chorus shared honors with the class. Of course Tom Wilson stuttered over his oration, and Nellie Green couldn’t be heard six feet away. How quickly it was all over! He really had done very well, so his friends said, but their congratulations were much alike, except Mary’s. He wished he could recall just what she said. The old president of the board said some good things, which he couldn’t remember; and what a solemn benediction that was until Will jogged his elbow and pointed to Jay’s patent leathers, two sizes too small.

So this is the end of school days. What will life seem like without a vacation and the expectancy of a higher grade next year? But after all it was a bondage. How hateful old Brown was, especially in Latin class! Whatever comes next, this is freedom at last.

II.
The uncertain glimmer of a gas jet burning low barely discloses the features of a room in which a young man is seated. The walls are hidden by pictures; over a well-filled bookcase gracefully droops a tennis net, decorated with fans; and in one corner are dimly outlined oars, poles, clubs and rackets. Their owner, sunk in an easy chair, seems to find in dream-like wreaths of smoke the panorama of the dying day.

How uneventful it has been! He would never recall it but for the one event—his graduation. The exercises, as in years past, were uniformly excellent and monotonous; not to be compared with Class Day, which had proved, to collegians and alumni, that this was the brightest class in years.

His parents had hurried away on the first train, and Mary with them. He saw her only an instant; she was not so beautiful or witty as many ladies he knew, but her company would make more endurable the few weeks he must spend in the little home town. But there was no haste about going; there were many last things to do.

After all, it was a little sad to part with his college mates. Never again would they meet on the same footing; there would always enter the barrier, though ever so slight, which exists between the hearts of the conqueror and the conquered in life's contest. How trifling seemed the defeats and honors of the college world, when face to face with the problem of intelligent, honest living! But whatever life might bring to him, he hoped the memory of his college days would remain, with all its present sweetness and vividness, and that he might never forsake the principles learned and proved there.

III.

The gray twilight of an October day hardly suffices to light the library of a large city home. Were it not for the bright glow from a large grate one could not distinguish the strong, pleasant features of a gentleman, sitting with his hands on the arms of his easy chair, and eyes half closed. It has been to him a significant and proud day in his office downtown. To-night, as he sits and thinks, as he seldom has time to do, over the past years, it scarcely seems credible that his son is beginning to-day where he began, seemingly so short a time ago. He has found great satisfaction in directing his training and education, and much pleasure in living over with him his college days, in visiting his alma mater, and renewing old associations.

The world has dealt kindly with him; success seems to have met him half-way, and it was not a mean portion which his son had that day received, in becoming his junior partner. Thus contentedly thinking of the present, and recalling the past, he was at last aroused by the entrance of Mary, leaning on the arm of her stalwart son, whom, playfully and yet gently, as though afraid to awaken in her husband some thought of advancing age, she introduced to the senior member of the firm.

IV.

The sun is shining brightly on fields seared by bleak December's frosts, but its rays hardly penetrate the heavy curtains of an upper room, in which an old man sits close by the fire. White haired, bent, and very feeble, the glorious sun seems hardly to have a rising and a setting. All the long weary hours seem as the chill twilight which precedes the dawn. Though lacking in none of the comforts of life, rich in the love of children and grandchildren, yet he is not contented, though uncomplaining. Through the long days and nights he thinks over and over the history of his life, and marvels that his perspective is so much clearer through this vista of years.

"How blindly have I lived," he soliloquizes again and again, "taking the first good which came, seeking the object immediately in view, mistaking evil for good, and good for evil. If I could only enter life with the understanding I now have of it, how differently would I have lived it. But I would not attempt the task again, for though life has been good to me, it is nothing compared to what I long for. How great is the infinite wisdom which deprives us one by one of all we hold dearest in life; its companions, its ambitions and hopes, and thus prepares us, by estrangement here, for fellowship hereafter. Life, with its series of schools, in which we learn to live, is itself one long school, from which God grant that I may graduate with honor."
A PLEA FOR NONSENSE.

THERE IS an old adage that "No man is at all times wise," which is as venerable for its truth as for its antiquity; and it might here be added that no man ought, at all times, to be wise. That is to say, there are times when the powers of that complex machine—the human mind—demand complete relaxation, when a little nonsense may be safely and profitably indulged in. The bow that is never unstrung loses its elasticity; and the mind whose powers are kept up to the extreme tension, at last finishes its labors with exhaustion or insanity.

Some old German philosopher has said, "He who lives without folly is not as wise as he thinks himself." Shakespeare says, "A man may smile and smile, and be a villain;" but it is questionable whether a man who can indulge in a good hearty laugh is capable of committing a base or criminal action. Nothing is more certain than that men laugh more heartily at nonsensical pranks, practical jokes, and the like, than at those sallies of wit that are purely intellectual; so, as we have established that laughter is a most salutary thing, it follows that the most commendable cause of it—a little unadulterated nonsense—is both desirable and praiseworthy.

Solomon, that wisest of mortals, decided that everything was "mere vanity"; and Socrates, after a life devoted to wisdom, discovered that the extent of his knowledge only taught him that he knew nothing. Truly, this is sufficient authority for an occasional descent into the sunny realms of nonsense; to step across the line which divides the sublime from the ridiculous. Who would give a fig for the heart or head of a man who could listen sourly and unmoved to some nonsensical prank of the college student, or an April-fool hoax? When we meet such an one we are inclined to avoid his company, or at least regard him with distrust. We have many good reasons for not believing that

"More true dullness lies
In Folly's cap than Wisdom's true disguise."

Even the gravest professions would hardly succeed without a liberal employment of nonsense. What are nine-tenths of the verbosity of common law forms but arrant nonsense? The legal recital of a simple assault and battery case is often ludicrous enough to convulse the gravest of judges. The medical fraternity is not without its grave but nonsensical jargon. Ministers even are not exempt from its use, and often drive a shaft home and fasten it upon an indifferent conscience by the careful handling of a little nonsense. And shall we offend by hinting that we should not venture to produce a file of love letters as examples of sound sense and calm, practical wisdom?

The high art in nonsense, as in everything else, is the use and not the abuse of it. The place, the time and the amount to use are very necessary things to learn. One must always bear this old couplet in mind:

"A little nonsense now and then,
Is relished by the best of men."

The evening sun is setting,
The rays of light now fail;
And shadows from the hill-tops
Are cast within the vale.
The Twilight soft and tender,
Once more extends her sway;
Then kindly yields to darkness.
Thus close the gates of day.
At his request, we place Mr. Tipper's name first, Pickard desires "Richard K. Fox" substituted for "Julius Caesar."

If we but knew the fate and fortune Waiting for us in this world, If we but knew the cares and troubles That on each will soon be hurled, Would we waste our time in counting Chickens ere yet they are hatched? Would we always wear Prince Alberts Just because our pants are patched?
Answers to Inquiries.

1. Yes; there are colleges in which marriage is forbidden among the students. However, no such law has been passed in Allegheny as yet.

2. We do not believe the faculty will allow you to substitute her music for any of your college work except physical culture.

H. S. C. — It has never been the policy of the Kaldrum to give any one especial mention in its columns, or to insert his photograph for a monetary consideration; consequently your offer has been referred to the advertising department.

Tom J. P. — Your oratorical ability is something marvelous, yet if the upper classmen refuse to recognize you, we hardly think a congressman of Mr. Breckenridge's fame would accept your challenge to debate.

Miss By—Ly — It certainly would grieve the Greek Letter Fraternities if they were to hear your opinion of them.

A. Sy—S. — We have no knowledge of openings at present for stump speakers or aspiring preachers and we do not think of any convention or assembly to be held in the immediate future, before which you could practice on the "wax eloquent."

Prof. Dutton sends the following query (copied from Vol. I, No. 1 of the Alleghenian): "If a single fly will lay 25,000 eggs in one year, how many would a married one lay?"

Pickard's Afternoon.

"Hung around the hall quite a while after dinner, and finally Virginia started down town. Went up to the Conservatory with her. Started for my room and met Bertha at the corner of Chestnut street and Park avenue. Walked clear up to Hulings Hall with her. 3:30 p. m.—Was just leaving, when Lou came out. Went down to the church with her and saw Maud going up, so hurried and caught up with her and made trip No. 2 to Hulings. 4:30. —Started back alone. Just as I got near my room, met Virginia going back, so I escorted her home. Pretty near supper time then, so I tagged Josie around till the bell rang. After supper I really felt as though I must go to my room."

A Page of Chronology.

September

1893.
Sept. 19—Students cordially invited to visit Treasury Department. Rushing begins. Johnny Hammert gives a free lecture in the library.* 28—J. T. J. applies for members. 32—Pratt translates a sentence in Tacitus correctly. (Equus utilis est.)

October

Oct. 5—Leaf from Prof. Jewell’s diary found on the road to Stringtown: “July 22. Big time on Midway. Observed some very pretty styles of feminine apparel. Drank several glasses of Hygeia Springs water. Lost my way. The man that reported that I ran through a mirror is an unmitigated liar and a falsifier and a fool.” 9—Brissin changes his socks for the year. 17—Some one asks if Gee and Miss Slater were sisters. 25—Henry asks the Prof. if chickens breathe through their pin feathers.

*This is a matter of daily occurrence, so it will not be recorded again.

November

Nov. 6—Prather did not utter more than 647,983,517 words during the day. 9—Chamberlain at drill, instructs: “Now remember, every rear-rank man follows the rear-rank man in front of him.” 21—Grace is said twice at Hulings hall. The food is not appreciably improved thereby.

December

Dec. 5—Madden appears in class with his hair combed. 8—Staples lets his trousers down a few inches at the bottom for winter.

January

1894.
Jan. 2—See Sept. 19. 9—Nell doesn’t see Herm till after chapel. 20—Miss Appleby goes skating. 27—Tipper takes a few steps without walking pigeon-toed.
Feb. 6—Miss Lynn heard to utter a sentence without slang. 11—Elliott having attempted to enhance his beauty by adding side fixtures to his physiognomy, eats a hearty (?) dinner at the Hall. They drop off. 17—Miss Edson recollects that she was once studying geometry and reading Xenophon, herself. 21—Ross eats cake with soap in it. 27—Prather and Ellis use the table at the drill hall for a toboggan slide.

Mar. 9—Hayden obtains leave of absence to bury his step-mother-in-law. 18—Thomas gives one of his classes a dissertation on the different brands and grades of wines.

Apr. 1—Sunday. Students do not attend church. 10—Prof. Holmes concluded he could articulate with greater facility with less moustache. 15—Lindsey writes congratulations to Miss Pollard. 16—Profs. don their new spring suits. 19—Senior reception. Every gentleman escorts a lady. 20-30—Faculty goes into committee of the whole on some very important questions. 25—Monty tells a new story.

May 1—Faculty resume. They also determine that all Seniors who attended the Pan-Hellenic banquet shall be expelled immediately after Commencement; all Juniors at the same time one year hence; the Sophomores in two years, and so forth.

The Kaldron board has procured a large quantity of (gun) cotton and (nitro) glycerine, which will be administered gratis to anyone who may fancy that he has received any scalds from the overflow of this Kaldron.

Letters to Illustrators.

The following letters were submitted to the board of editors by the illustrators in explanation of their failure to furnish certain cuts:

Dear Frank:—I got the mail from Jake this morning and saw your postal to Murph about "Kaldron" cuts. I want to warn you against making a sketch of me on the high school steps. I admit that it would not be inappropriate, and as for myself I would not care at all, but you know how unpleasant it would be for an outsider to be thus made fun of. I think Kaldron jokes should hit college people alone and not outsiders. I am sure I never played a single practical joke on any of the boys when it would be unpleasant for the girls, and I hope others will treat me in the same way.

Yours sincerely,

C. A. Crank.

Mr. Jagomast:—I understand that you intend to draw some pictures for the Kaldron on the disgraceful stove affair of last term. Such publicity would only hurt the college and I entreat you, as a gentleman, to consider the matter well and lend no hand in the execution of this idea.

Respectfully yours,

Dear Nory:—I hear that the art committee has ordered a cut of me for the Kaldron. Now it's just like this, Nory, if you can keep putting it off, from time to time, until it is too late, I will give five times what you would get for it. Please don't disappoint me.

Yours,

Herman Hogg.

Pond's Extract.

If you wish to take regular daily exercise and not be compelled to desist from work because of sore muscles, you must, after exercising, thoroughly rub the muscles with Pond's Extract. By its use you are made quick and active, and all stiffness, swelling is prevented, and you will avoid the danger of taking cold on going out after exercising.

We have a book full of testimonials from the most famous athletes; to quote them is superfluous. Almost everyone in training uses it, but don't expect some cheap substitute for Pond's Extract to do what the genuine article will; for you will surely be disappointed. Manufactured only by

University of Pennsylvania,

The attention of those who are about to study Medicine is earnestly invited to the superior facilities afforded by the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania. While the requirements for entrance and for graduation have been raised much higher than formerly, the opportunities afforded for acquiring a thorough medical examination have been correspondingly increased. The buildings of the Medical School, not including the Hospital, were erected at a cost of over $300,000, exclusive of the site. They contain amply provided Laboratories for the study of Chemistry, Pharmacy, anatomy, Histology, Physiology, Pathology, and Surgical Anatomy. In order to secure sufficient opportunities for the study of Clinical Medicine, the University Hospital was some years ago founded, and has rapidly attained large capacity. Its buildings cost $350,000. It has connected with it an Out-Door Department, at which are treated over 10,000 patients annually. Further, the great Philadelphia City Hospital, containing 1,000 beds, is only a few hundred feet from the University, and as many of the teaching corps of the University are upon its medical staff, its wards are much utilized for Clinical instruction.

The Course is a graded one, extending over four years of eight months each, and is so arranged as to afford opportunity not only for thorough Laboratory Instruction in the Fundamental Scientific Branches of the Profession, but also for a complete practical drill in Physical Diagnosis, besides which, the student is carefully instructed at the bedside in the Recognition and Treatment of all Diseases.

THE NEW ENGLAND BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

Reasons why this Bureau has Gained and deserves the Confidence and Patronage of to forge a Constiuency of Teachers and School Officers all over the Nation.

1. Because it is the oldest Teachers' Agency in New England, having been established in 1876.
2. Because its Manager for the last eleven years is a professional educator, and has become familiar with the condition and wants of every grade of schools, and the necessary qualifications of teachers.

"From my knowledge of Dr. Hiram Orcutt, I should not expect any man in the country to excel him in selecting the right teacher for the right place."—Hon. John Eaton, President Marietta College, and for 4 years U.S. Com. of Education.

3. Because the number of our candidates is large and embraces many of the ablest teachers, male and female, in the profession.

"We have always found at the office of the New England Bureau of Education a good list of well educated and experienced teachers to select from, and the representations made to us concerning the candidates have been in every case fully reliable and true."—Supt. A. J. Stone, Springfield, Mass.

4. Because all applications for teachers receive prompt and careful attention.

"I have accepted the position in Memphis, Tenn., which you secured for me; salary $400. Thanks for your prompt and efficient service in my behalf."—Miss S. G. F., Auburn, Mass.

"Your bureau is as prompt in its response as the Boston Fire Department. We thank you for your courteous aid so promptly extended."—Supt. C. B. Bruce, Lynn, Mass.

5. Because our pledge for fair dealing and devotion to the interests of our patrons has been redeemed.

"We have always found at the office of the New England Bureau of Education a good list of well educated and experienced teachers to select from, and the representations made to us concerning the candidates have been in every case fully reliable and true."—Gen. T. J. Morgan, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D.C.

My Dear Dr. Orcutt:

Your letter Sept. 17th received. You are correct in supposing that I wished you to act for me and in my interests, as if you were the head of the school. The time was so short that I could not do otherwise, and allow me to add that I did so with entire confidence in the excellence of your judgment. Your experience has been such that I felt perfectly safe in placing the responsibility on you. I believe that there are other excellent teachers' agencies, but I did not feel like putting a matter of so much importance to me wholly in the hands of another. If I had insisted on seeing the candidate or corresponding with him, I might have lost the opportunity to engage the gentleman whom you have selected, and been forced to take an inferior teacher. I expect Mr. M's work will prove your judgment of him correct. His estimate of himself makes him strong where I am weak, and that is what I want.

Yours cordially, E. H. Wilson.
