Senior Comp Recognition

A Final Presentation

By JENNA NIGRO
Staff Reporter

Members of the campus community will have the chance to hear Allegheny seniors talk about their comps over lunch this month. In the AcCOMPlishments program, two students will briefly present their projects each Friday during April.

The presentations will take place in the Walker Room in the Campus Center from 12:20 to 1:20. The eight students will each speak for 15 to 20 minutes about their topic, and then briefly take questions from the audience. No reservations are needed, and lunch will be provided for free by Sodexo.

AcCOMPlishments was organized by Emily Adair, who is completing an internship with the Office of Events. She said that to her knowledge, this type of program has not been done before at Allegheny.

"There have been people who wanted to start a program like this, but they never had the opportunity, or never got it up and running," she said. Those people are giving her support.

The projects deal with a variety of topics, and some will include visual or musical clips. For instance, Jamie Williams' comp is a video documentary.

Williams said that the program was a good thing for those students who have developed strong topics that they "own." "It is a good opportunity for them to be recognized," she said.

Williams said students would have the chance to "let people know about their little portion of expertise," Adair said, "I think that there are a lot of really interesting topics people choose for their comp. Our comprehensive projects are supposed to be a culmination of what we have learned at Allegheny. Often not too many people find out about them, have a chance to witness or view any of them."

On Fridays, April 5 and 12, those presenting will briefly talk about their comp, "Parents Presumptions About Their Children's Understanding of Death," and Stephanie English will speak about "Tales of Suffering Strength and Resilience: Two Fictional Accounts of the Irish Famines."

On Friday, April 19, Liz Schwartz will explain her project, titled, "Assessment of the Extent of Road Imposed Edge Effects on Forest Structure and Composition," and the audience will have the chance to learn about Jamie Williams' political documentary on experiences in Pignon, Haiti.

Melissa Knoer will speak about her comp, "Represent This: Challenging Images of Black Female Sexuality in Hip Hop Music," and Lauren Guehl will present on "Midwifery in the United States" on Friday, April 19.

Reaching Out to Sexual Violence Victims

By MATT CARCELLA
Staff Reporter

April has been designated Sexual Violence Awareness Month, sponsored by Women's Services Inc. of Meadville. This month is used as a time to promote healing and closure to victims of sexual violence and to promote awareness to current victims of sexual violence and the community as a whole.

WSI is hosting, in conjunction with other organizations, a number of activities throughout the month of April. A display is available at the Market House downtown. This display contains information about Women's Services Inc. and the services that they provide.

Healing workshops will be held the second, third and fourth Tuesdays in April. The workshops are directed towards victims of sexual violence and include weekly topics such as journaling, the inner healing and achievement of peace through writing; Reiki, an ancient healing technique; and Energetic Healing, the balancing of your system and the achievement of holistic health through the body's energy fields. All of the workshops will be conducted in the Arthur Room of the Unitarian Universalist Church in Meadville, from 6 to 8 p.m.

A capstone of April will be the "Take Back the Night" event. WSI will be hosting a march, rally and candlelight vigil at Ford Chapel on April 17 at 6 p.m. It is a time for victims of sexual violence and their friends to come together and celebrate the strength and courage of survivors.

Women's Services, Inc. is a nonprofit organization incorporated in 1977. The organization works to support, develop and facilitate programs and services to address the needs of women and children in Crawford County. WSI provides counseling, shelter to victims of sexual violence, education in schools and the community and also assists women with legal issues.

WSI provides all of its services free of charge and confidentially. WSI relies heavily on volunteers that, among other duties, do supportive counseling, hotline coverage, children's group activities, fund raising and abuse awareness workshops.

WSI is a member of the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence, the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape and the United Way of Crawford County. Federal, state and local governments, as well as private contributions and fundraisers also provide funding.

Sexual Violence Awareness on campus is also a mission of WSI. Nation-wide, nearly three percent of college women (one in 36) are victims of rape or attempted rape in an academic year, according to a new study funded by the U.S. Department of Justice's National Institute of Justice. However, the study also finds that fewer than five percent of sexual assaults or attempted sexual assault on college campuses are reported to the police.

Approximately 13 percent of women interviewed reported being victims of stalking. Sexual Victimization calculates a stalking incidence rate of 156.5 per 1,000 female students.

According to the WSI service's guide, abuse includes having a person "track" you, constantly accuse you of being unfaithful, encourage relationships with friends or family, anger easily when under the influence of alcohol or drugs, destroy personal property or sentimental items, threaten to hurt you, strike you or force you to have sex against your will.

For more information about WSI or Sexual Violence Awareness Month, contact Women's Services, Inc. at 724-4637. WSI encourages those who feel they are being abused to contact them on their 24-hour hotline at 1-888-881-0189.

CAMPUS BRIEFS

"Did you enjoy your orientation experience? Do you want to help welcome new students and share your love of Allegheny? Join the Orientation program and become an Orientation Leader. Applications are available in the Student Activities Office (Campus Center, 2nd floor) or on-line at http://webpub.allegeheny.edu/dep/so/oorient.html. Applications will be accepted until Wednesday, April 10 at 5 p.m. For more information, contact Nancy Frambes at <nframbes> or at 332-2754.

The Paul Hyland Harris Memorial Scholarship Fund provides scholarships for Allegheny students from Crawford, Warren, or Venango Counties. Students who would like an application may stop at the Financial Aid Office. Applications are due in the Financial Aid Office by Monday, April 15. Dependents of National City Bank employees are not eligible.

The Academy Theatre will present Movies You May Have Missed, a weekly film series. All films are recent and critically acclaimed, but enjoyed limited commercial runs and were therefore missed by many movie fans. According to series organizer and Dean of the College Lloyd Michaels, "These films are hidden gems. We look forward to screening them under the first rate viewing conditions offered by the Academy Theatre." The series will continue on Thursday, April 4 with a showing of Sweet and Lowdown (1999) at 7 p.m. at the Academy Theatre (275 Chestnut Street). Directed by Woody Allen, this comedy reveals the life of 1930s jazz guitarist Emmett Ray, an irresponsible, free-spending, arrogant alcohol abuser, who was also perhaps the best guitarist in the world. Ray's bouts of drunkenness, bizarre hobbies and strange obsession with the better-known guitarist Django Reinhardt are mixed with his beautiful music. Woody Allen's most self-revelatory movie, Sweet and Lowdown stands out and is guaranteed to be an amazing display of talent and creativity. The concert begins at 8 p.m. in the Montgomery Performing Space. Admission is free. To reserve seating, contact the Allegheny Dance Program at 332-2813.

The Pittsburgh Symphony will present a concert of works by Busoni, Knussen and Henze on Friday, April 5 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 (includes concert and transportation). The bus will leave Meadville from Highland Avenue near Shafer Auditorium at 4:30 p.m. All interested in attending should contact Jonathan Graber at jgraber@allegheny.edu or 332-3307 for further information.

Hard Work Pays Off: Students Present Achievements

In the past two months, many Allegheny students have made remarkable achievements and have taken the time to share their success with the Allegheny community.

Recently, student art has captured the spotlight at Allegheny, demonstrating the many creative talents and accomplishments of the College's artistic students.

With the opening of the annual Student Show this past Tuesday, students have the opportunity to display their work in a critical setting guided by the Art department. At the same time, students are also taking the initiative to display their work independently at the Grounds for Change coffeehouse, sponsored by the Student Art Society.

Both avenues have enabled students to display their artwork, a culmination of intense physical labor and creative self-expression. The Campus feels that displaying such artwork publicly is an integral part of the Allegheny experience, and also demonstrates an appreciation for the efforts of students and their commendable artistic abilities.

We encourage the student body to attend the openings of events like these in the future, and hope students will visit the coffeehouse and Doane galleries regularly to view these installations and show support for both the works on display and the talented artists behind them, who undoubtedly deserve recognition from their peers, as well as from the Allegheny community.

Also, because of the AccOMPlishments program, seniors have the opportunity to present their comps to the public. As every Allegheny student knows, comps require an unprecedented amount of research, experimentation and writing from seniors, whose entire Allegheny career culminates with approximately 50 pages of in-depth analysis.

By ignoring these comps upon their completion, the Allegheny community ultimately passes over the many innovative ideas of future graduates and the results of their semester-long, academic journeys.

Through AccOMPlishments, however, students can proudly take credit for hours and hours of brow-beating work and share their findings with others who have taken the time to appreciate their success.

The Campus congratulates all students on campus who have recently shared their impressive achievements with the community, and we hope others will have the opportunity to do so in the near future.

Please demonstrate your support for those students who have worked extraordinarily hard this semester and deserve a pat on the back.

Letters to the Editor

Information on ANWR

Jason Peck's article "Drilling for Oil Doesn't Spoil the Landscape" was obviously written by a person who has never spoken to or heard from anyone that has spent time in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR). Far too numerous to address in one editorial, his arguments declaring this abominable wasteland important merely for the oil beneath works upon a value system that believes environmental destruction is temporary and will not harm human beings. Unfortunately, Peck is dead wrong.

Particularly irksome was Peck's assertion that the Gwich'in people living outside the Refuge will not be harmed by the drilling. The Gwich'in depend upon the Porcupine Caribou and are enormously susceptible to environmental changes within the Refuge that disturb their migration. The Caribou pass through un eclined and will not necessarily reflect the views of The Campus. The deadline for submission of letters is 5 p.m. the Monday before publication. Letters must be typed, signed and sent to Box 12, with a phone number included for verification. Any letter that cannot be verified will not be printed.

All questions concerning the above policy should be directed to the Editor-in-Chief, Abby Collier.

After 11.5 hours in two vans driving to our destination we managed to know a lot more about each other than when we started off. We spent that time sharing stories from our pasts, sharing laughs and sharing views on different matters. Let me just tell you, based on that experience, riding in a van for 11.5 hours definitely will let you find out much more about the people you ride with. I learned to distinguish who the car scratchers are/were and who really were evil as children, although they put up a good front in their college years.

Although these things are quite interesting, they are small compared to the things I learned from the service we completed. I learned over break what it feels like to be a minority in a situation and what it feels like to be unappreciated (regardless if you are really unappreciated or not) when you are trying to make a difference for others. With the previous lessons I've mentioned, I am very grateful to have had those experiences. I began to reflect what I must feel like for people who are normally minorities and feel out of place. I thought about how the majority might treat them and how as part of the majority I can try to change that. I realize that I have only had one experience to what some minorities experience daily, but I am hoping that with my small slice of insight that I can at least begin to understand what they might be dealing with.

But it wasn't entirely bad, I promise. I got to spend a week with and get to know a wonderful group of my peers. I got to spend a week playing with some fabulous kids who I wouldn't have met otherwise. I painted walls, ran from ghosts in a haunted church, laughed, cut papers until my fingers almost fell off, shared stories with new friends, strengthened old friendships, courted my fear of The Gateway Arch elevator and, overall, had a wonderful time. I am thankful for the friends I made and the people I had the opportunity to meet. This is the kind of experience that I will miss upon graduating from Allegheny — one where I could learn and experience so much while having a super time and making memories that will last a lifetime.

Allegheny Recognizes Senior Citizens

By DANIELLE DAGER
Staff Reporter

Senior Recognition Day at Allegheny is fast approaching. On April 10, Allegheny College and Active Aging will sponsor the day-long event from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. The Retired Senior Volunteer Program will also sponsor the event.

The day will begin with an opening ceremony by Richard Browdie, the Pennsylvania secretary of aging. He will discuss the future of aging services in the Commonwealth.

Browdie is a 1969 graduate of Allegheny and a native of northwestern Pennsylvania. He has previously been the executive director of the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging in Washington, D.C., and has served as president of the American Society on Aging.

This is an annual event where local senior citizens come to Allegheny College to participate in classes and special events planned especially for them," said Deb Baker, director of events at Allegheny.

Members of the Meadville Community over the age of 60 are encouraged to attend. The College will be hosting more than 50 activities for the seniors to choose from. The seniors can attend classes, have a campus tour and eat lunch with students.

Seniors will be attending class from 10 to 11 a.m. They will either have lunch at Brooks with students or in the Campus Center lobby. At 11 a.m. there will be fine dancing in the Campus Center Lobby, in which both students and seniors can participate.

Students are encouraged to reach out to the older community members by offering assistance if they look lost, greeting them with a smile, or starting a conversation. In past years, the seniors have always been impressed with the students of Allegheny, saying they always seem warm and friendly.

In past years, Senior Recognition Day has proved to be enjoyable both for students and the senior members. The event has always been received well by both groups and is expected to do so again this year.

The Office of Community Services needs over 100 students to volunteer for Senior Recognition Day. Students can serve as registration aides, escorts, lunch companions, furniture movers or information resources.

Students are encouraged to volunteer, even if they can only participate for an hour or two. If students are interested in participating, they can contact Dave Roncolato at 332-5318.

Speaker to Advise Seniors On Money Management

By LAUREN McCATTY
Staff Reporter

May’s graduation is quickly approaching, and for some Allegheny seniors there are many unanswered questions. For some it is figuring out where to next, while others are concerned with finding a job or starting a career. However, what many students may not realize is the level of security that will be lost while taking this next step — financial security.

Allegheny has arranged for retired tax attorney and CPA Scott Beeken to speak during an event called “Managing Your Money.” He will address the main topics, such as saving, compounding, buying vs. leasing a car, life, auto, and medical insurance, housing and credit cards.

This lecture is a dinner event and will be held in Schultz Hall on Friday April 5 at 5:30 p.m. It’s open to all seniors who wish to attend, and invitations will be sent out.

The Career Services department of Allegheny has addressed money management in the past, but students, especially upperclassmen, have voiced a large interest and a request for more information.

Director of Career services Melissa Barnes said she realized the level of inquiry during her time at Westminster College. “Every year I asked students to take a survey that included possible topics that could be addressed, and every year they chose money management,” she said.

With this in mind, and to adhere to the importance of good saving and spending habits adapted early in life, President of the College Richard Cook proposed the development of a program designed for seniors that will address most areas of independent financing.

“Matters of sound financial management and intelligent investing are best learned early in life. The principle of compounded returns is important to know early so time can play its critical part in exponential growth,” Cook said.

Beeken first became interested in developing a program on personal finance for undergraduate students because of his own two college-aged children. After hearing their insight and answering their many questions about finances and investing, he realized that despite his occupation and area of expertise, they remained uninformed.

“If my children didn’t have the basics, I figured there had to be millions of other college students who were in a similar situation as they were getting ready to embark on their careers,” he said.

Beeken decided to design a program that would teach the best lessons that he had learned over the past years about being economical and how to plan finances, or as best put by Beeken, “All the things I wish someone would have taught me when I was just starting out from college.”

A much smaller approach to money management by the College in the past was included as part of Senior Saturday, which is an annual event that takes place one Saturday morning in January. It is a job market designed for seniors, allowing them to choose from different areas and receive information. Finance and money management was offered on a much smaller scale, however, and only reached a small number of students.

“Many students chose not to attend this activity, and from those who did, only a portion of the students selected that area to visit,” Barnes said.

“We want to reach more students. It is not just for economic majors, but more so for those who do not know as much detail about this subject,” said Career services coordinator Gretchen Kerr.

Those organizing this event expect a turnout of about 75 students. If successful, it will become an annual event.

ASG Passes Increase in Activities Fee

By ERIC PATTERSON
Staff Reporter

The proposed increase in ASG’s General Fund was passed last Tuesday, March 26 at 7:30 p.m. during ASG’s weekly meeting. They also held an open forum during this time for all students to pledge their support or voice concerns.

The increase will add $13 to each student’s annual student activities fee, benefiting many involved in ASG sponsored groups directly. This year, the student activities fee was $280, $90 of which went to ASG’s General Fund, a sum it uses to sponsor groups on campus. Until now, ASG was allotted $164,285 by the College each year.

Since 1998, however, this figure has not increased, while the number of groups funded by ASG has risen 25 percent. The dollar amount available for each group and each student, thus, was actually decreasing.

The new proposal hopes to remedy this situation, for the student activities fee increase will raise the General Fund to about $190,000.

“This money is really, really important. I don’t know what would happen without this money,” ASG Treasurer Tina Wyland said. “It’s a step in the right direction.”

ASG Financial Controller Andy Devincenzi added.

According to Dean of Students Joe DeChristina, “The money is going straight to the students. It will be yours to control.”

Because of the positive results of the vote on March 26, students ultimately supported ASG’s plan.
Student Show Opens

By SARAH JOSEPH
Assistant Weekend Editor

Currently on display in the Doane Art Galleries is "The Student Show", 96 works by 52 of Allegheny's very own student artists.

The art students at Allegheny invited two outside jurors, Barbara Bernstein and Adrienne Henrich, both from Pittsburgh, to select the exhibits for the show. They chose from almost 300 works that were submitted.

"The show is a good experience for anyone who creates art, whether they are an art major or not. It is a great opportunity to have your work shown," said junior Amanda Lachowski.

The kind of art on display is diverse, as it ranges from paintings and sculptures to photographs and computer art.

Teresa Zicarelli, a junior Art major and Psychology minor, explained that she combined her fields of study when creating her two doors, which are on display. They are part of a five part series that represents the different stages of life.

During the reception that was held Tuesday April 2, to celebrate the opening, four winners of the Doane Prize were announced. Art department faculty members, in conjunction with the two jurors, awarded Victoria Akers first place in the "Painting of Drawing" category, Scott Conard first place in the "Graphics" category and Amanda McElfresh and Anne Moffa tied for first place in the "Sculpture and Ceramics" category.

The winners of the Doane Prize, provided by the late Foster B. Doane, a former Allegheny College trustee, received a cash award, as well as an inscribed book.

The Art Department also chose works by Amanda McElfresh, Anne Moffa, Victoria Akers, Joseph Betz, Crystal Byler, Amanda Dollowish, Amanda Lachowski and Julie Nagel to be purchased by the College through the Doane Student Art Acquisitions Fund to put on display.

The outstanding art on display is not limited to what the jurors chose. Art that was not selected for the show is on display in the halls outside the galleries. This additional exhibition is organized by the Student Art Society, as a "Salon des Refusés," an art tradition of displaying alternative works.

The entire show will remain open to the public until April 24. Gallery hours are 12:30 to 5 p.m. on Tuesday through Friday, 1:30 to 5 p.m. on Saturday and 2 to 4 p.m. on Sunday. For more information, contact the galleries at 332-4365.

College to Participate in Knowledge Symposium

By EMILY MACEL
News Editor

In an ongoing effort to provide students with a well-rounded liberal arts education, Allegheny is having a two-day symposium titled Perspectives on Consciousness: Ways of Knowing. This event is intended to show the links between various fields of studies, including communications, neuroscience and art. On Friday, April 5 and Saturday, April 6, students, faculty and the general public are invited to explore the links between consciousness, the nervous system and life.

Robert Shumaker, coordinator of the Orang Utan Language Project at the Smithsonian Institution’s National Zoological Park and director of behavioral cognitive studies at George Mason University’s Krasnow Institute for Advanced Study, will be in attendance and also lecturing at the event.

Shumaker is no stranger to Allegheny. "This is actually the second time I've collaborated with an event at Allegheny. Last year there was an event with the national zoo and it was very successful and well attended," Shumaker said. "Frankly, what I hope is that communication will continue. I think we have a lot to offer one another. I'm very interested in presenting to an audience with an interest in public education through art as well as public collaboration."

Shumaker shares his research of great ape cognitive ability with several schools and universities. He has been working on his current research since 1995, and has nearly 20 years of experience in his subject. "I know that certainly the content will be interesting to everyone interested in primate behavior but I am always thrilled to talk to people from other fields to generate interest from those not so familiar," he said.

Professor Alec Chien of the music department will be holding a workshop called the Neuroscience of Music Comprehension. He said he finds the connections of fields of study to be very important. "I think a liberal arts curriculum should try and bring forth the attention of either the student or the listener to the understanding that many disciplines in life have not only a great deal in common, but because we are human, in doing these things there are always aspects of different fields that have a common ground or coherence," Chien said.

Roundtable discussions, workshops, and presentations will be featured during this symposium on various topics such as Orang Utans and language research, visual arts, dance and movement and artificial intelligence. Workshops such as Chien's will be featured in the afternoons, including "Mind and the Brain," "Neuroscience of the Visual Arts," "Neuroscience of Dance and Movement," and "Funding Sources and Grants for Interdisciplinary Course Creation." For more information on schedules and registration, contact Michele Deudne at 332-5388 or e-mail mcleudne@allegheny.edu.

Members of ARD to Perform this Weekend

By ADRIENNE COBLE
Staff Reporter

With whirls of color and echoes of lively rhythms, the Allegheny Repertory Dance Program will present its Spring 2002 performance April 4, 5 and 6 at 8 p.m. in the Montgomery Performance space. According to Jan Hyatt, choreographer and dance program coordinator, this is the earliest spring performance ARD has had in its 19 years.

ARD has provided Allegheny students and community members with the unique opportunity of experiencing and participating in the creative processes of professionals in the field. "The only dance performance Allegheny had when I came here in 1982 was Orchesis. I thought that in addition to student work, professional work needed to have a venue," Hyatt said.

The ARD performances were originally held in the Playshop Theatre until the program outgrew the space. A success for many years, the cast of ARD 2002 numbers nearly 50 dancers and performers from a variety of dance experiences and training, as well as academic and professional backgrounds.

This year's program combines personal exploration, observation of human patterns, and an understanding of the body with dynamic and inspirational music. The program opens with "Changes: A Dance Ritual", choreographed by artist-in-residence, James Reedy. When
Students Second to Display Art at Grounds for Change

By ABBY COLLIER
Editor-in-Chief

Junior Studio Art majors Amanda Lachowski and Teresa Zicarelli will present past work and work stemming from their Junior Seminars this Saturday, April 6 from 7 to 9 p.m. in the Grounds for Change coffeehouse. The opening is sponsored by the Student Art Society, and Lachowski and Zicarelli's work will remain on display throughout the month.

Teresa and I share a studio space [in the Oddfellows building]," Lachowski said. "We've worked together before."

Lachowski will display a series of drawings she started last semester using sanders, grinders and erasers. She will also display work that evolved out of her Junior Seminar.

For Studio Art majors, Lachowski explained how the Junior Seminar consists of an independent project that prepares students for their comps, as well as a final paper.

"I enjoy the physical nature of drawing," Lachowski said, especially "getting dirty." "My work is really abstract," she added. She said her work reflects that of Dorothea Tanning, an American surrealist painter from the 1940s.

Lachowski and Zicarelli's show is the second to open in the coffeehouse, following the likes of senior Joseph Betz and junior Michael O'Brien, whose show opened March 2.

Studio Art majors now have the opportunity to display their work in the coffeehouse because of sophomore and Student Art Society President Marieke Rosenbaum, who also works at the coffeehouse and is a member of its board.

Rosenbaum said she wanted to pursue the possibility for students to display their work in the coffeehouse because other schools, like Carnegie Mellon University and Skidmore College, have galleries set aside specifically for students, giving them the opportunity to display their work on a regular basis.

"I think it's something campuses should have and provide for its students," she said. "The only student show they [Allegheny students] have on campus is judged."

ALLEGHENY, Rosenbaum explained, gives students the opportunity to display their work for the annual Student Show, but emphasized that the show is judged by two outside artists selected by the College, who come to determine what work is submitted and what is left out.

By giving students the option to display their work in the coffeehouse, Rosenbaum said students can themselves select the work they would like others to see. "I think it's important to pick what you want to show," she said.

Zicarelli said displaying art in the coffeehouse gives the public access to student work. "It's nice to put up your work so your family members can see," she said. "The [coffeehouse] gets work up so people can see it on campus."

Rosenbaum added that these shows "bring students together." "I think it's good for people to see the work," she said, explaining that art provides a "whole other way to express yourself."

However, both Lachowski and Zicarelli said they didn't know if student shows could continue in the coffeehouse because of future Campus Center renovations, which will relocate Grounds for Change, making available space uncertain.

"I definitely hope it will continue," Rosenbaum said.

Grounds for Change is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. and 6 p.m. to 12 a.m. and Sunday from 4 p.m. to 12 a.m.

Lachowski and Zicarelli also have artwork on display in the Student Show, which opened this past Tuesday in the Doane galleries and will be on display throughout the month. The gallery hours are 12:30 to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Friday, 1:30 to 5 p.m. on Saturday and 2 to 4 p.m. on Sunday.

asked about the inspiration behind this work and what it means to him, Reedy said, "For me it's multi-dimensional and has a lot to do with the balance of sexuality and love. It's also a right of passage into the heart." One of its 10 dancers, Carla Monzo, said, "It requires a lot of inner exploration. It's demanding emotionally and physically, but it's rewarding as well."

Betsy Sumrfield has created an ingenious piece called "Waiting..." for this year's ARD program. This work is danced by a company of 14. When asked about the theme, she said, "The point of the piece is that there is no story. It's about waiting, and the patterns of rhythm that people get into while they wait."

Louisa's Dance was choreographed by Hollie Labbe, who is returning this year to conduct her third summer of modern dance intensives at Allegheny. When Labbe danced this same piece in a faculty concert a few years ago, Hyatt thought this was "such an extraordinary piece for ARD, so I purchased it for my most advanced dancers."

Dancer Jenny Crooks, a senior said, "I saw the piece in a concert my first year and at the end of that year, I started working with the choreographer Hollie Labbe in some dance intensives." In the upcoming performance Crooks will be dancing that piece she saw performed in her first year.

Differing stylistically from the other pieces in ARD 2002 are the Buena Vista Social Club's Latin dances. Unlike many of the other ballroom dances, successful performance of the Latin dances depends upon sensuousness and playful tension between the partners. These dances emphasize a relationship with the body, particularly with the hips, that makes dances like the Samba, Rumba, Mambo, Argentine Tango, and Cha Cha often challenging for Americans.

Hyatt choreographed these dances as an extension of Ballroom Dance II. "I never dreamed that there would be 13 couples who put in the time and had the appetite and passion to make this a success," she said. Of the five Latin dances to be performed, the Rumba and the Argentine Tango will feature a different couple or group of couples each night. The Samba, Mambo, and Cha Cha are company dances.

A collaboration of choreographer Jan Hyatt and musician John Hyatt, the "Dylan Suite" is based on a love of the music of Bob Dylan. "Dylan," Hyatt says, "is truly a 20th century poet and his themes are still meaningful today."

Two Gator Divers Land Top Ten Finishes at National Meet

By LOU KLEIN
Sports Editor

Junior John Hreha and sophomore Kelley Anderson have become accustomed to success in their Allegheny diving careers. They have combined to win every North Coast Athletic Conference Diver of the Year honors since they have come to Meadville. The goal for the duo this year was to take the next step on the national level. They reached their goals, as Hreha finished second in the men’s 1-meter diving competition on March 21, and Anderson collected a seventh-place finish in the 1-meter diving on March 14 and tenth in the 3-meter diving on March 16. For their efforts, they were both named as Division 3 All-Americans.

Despite the strong results, both divers have their mind focused on higher goals. "The 1-meter was a good result, but I was a little disappointed in my performance in the 3-meter," Hreha said. "On one of my dives my knees buckled a little bit and that prevented me from performing my dive and knocked me out of the finals." It led to a 12th-place finish. "To finish 12th in the nation is still wonderful, but it’s still a little on the disappointing side," he added. Hreha finished second in both the 1-meter and 3-meter last season.

"I was very pleased with the year," Anderson said. "My goal was to finish in the top eight in the 1-meter and the top ten in the 3-meter, so I achieved both of those goals. Each year you look for improvement, and I feel that I accomplished that."

Only St. Olaf senior Gabe Kortuem, who collected 553.65 points, bested Hreha’s total of 503.25 points in the 1-meter competition. Kortuem placed third in the 2001 championships, while 2001 champion Derek Chicarilli, a senior at Middlebury, placed third behind Hreha with 495.75 points. Anderson tallied 361.95 points in the 1-meter. Champion Lindsay Moore, a senior at Springfield, finished with a total of 391.45 points. Seniors compromised the top three finishers of the competition.

A victory by Hreha would have been Allegheny’s second individual national champion of the school year after junior pole vaulter Jeremy Scott brought home gold at the NCAA Division 3 Indoor Track and Field Championships in March. While he admits that the title was his goal, Hreha remains confident for the future. "The first-place and third-place finishers were both seniors, so that gives me hope for next season," he said. "Nevertheless, there were a ton of competitive freshmen and sophomores at the meet. There was a high level of talent there."

Both Hreha and Anderson were pleased with their All-American honors. "It’s something that you strive for in your career. To achieve a goal like that makes it all the more exciting," Anderson said.

Anderson was also additionally excited about her tenth-place finish. "I moved up seven places from my result last year," she said. "While it’s not where I want to ultimately end up, I’m definitely going in the right direction."

The diving duo has time to reflect on their accomplishments of 2001-2002 while being able to look ahead to the future. "I know what I have to do now," Hreha said. "But what I’m going to do now is take a little break from diving after a long year. Then I’m going to get ready to come back strong again next year." Anderson agreed. "The All-American honors are exciting, and I want to keep making improvements," she said. "I’d like my goal for next season to finish in the top three, and my ultimate goal would be to win the national championship."

The combination of John Hreha and Kelley Anderson may be done for this year, but it’s likely the diving world hasn’t heard the last from them.

Chill Out, Dude

Cold Showers Enlighten

By EXTRA TERRESTRIAL
Close Encounter

The Death Center of Agony College recently brought to the Board of Cruisies' attention a proposal to restrict the amount of hot water designated for showers. The logic behind such a proposition would reportedly be in the best interest of students' health. What began as a comp idea for senior Getme Outthere has quickly turned into one of the biggest scientific breakthroughs seen in Mudville for decades.

"I had no idea that my comp would turn out to be such a big deal," exclaimed Outtahere, president of the Cold Showers Enlighten. "When I first came up with the proposal, I was told that it probably wouldn't work, but now I may influence the entire future of Agony College!"

Outthere's comp planned to have the hot water supply restricted in a certain number of showers randomly selected throughout campus. At the request of Outthere, the student body was not informed of the experiment so that the reactions incurred would be more spontaneous. The idea behind the research was to see how the change in water temperature affected various aspects of students' lives. However, until this past Friday, it appeared that the idea was going nowhere.

"Before last week, the only trend I had consistently noticed was a lot of complaining and some articles in The Campus. Now I realize just how much the cold showers can benefit the student population," Outtahere said.

The breakthrough came when Professor Lotsa Papers noticed that those students living in dorms with cold showers were more able to stay awake in class than their warm-showered counterparts.

It has been a long accepted fact that most students do not get the recommended eight to 10 hours of sleep in a week, let alone a single night. Many students attribute this fact to the amount of work placed on them by professors.

"I have so many papers to write and tests to study for," complained first-year student I. N. Sommaia, "that I am lucky if I get three consecutive hours of sleep a night!"

This phenomenon has led to a sharp increase in the number of people drifting off in class. According to Professor Papers, students falling asleep in class have become a serious problem. However, since the cold showers have been implemented in certain dorms around campus, the number of students sleeping through lectures has significantly decreased.

According to the staff of the Death Center, combined with the research of Outthere, this change can be explained by two possibilities. The most widely accepted explanation was that the shock of cold water wakes tired students up.

"The cold water wakes me up better than the coffee at McCrapley's!" exclaimed Ty End. "I used to have problems waking up in the morning, but after a couple of minutes under ice-cold water, I have no problem staying awake!"

This theory was most popular in scientific circles until last week, when new evidence accidentally discovered by Outthere suggested

Raise Your Pinky Against Awareness Weeks

By LENA BITMORE
Paid Reporter

Students have probably noticed the rash of theme weeks and awareness weeks here at Agony College. Last week, for instance, was Sugar Substitute Awareness Week, Foot Pain Awareness Week, Non-Violence Week, Violence Week, and the semi-official Week to Punish That Ashhole Jeff; He Deserves It.

In response to this onslaught, a group of students have organized Anti-Awareness Weeks, which will take place next week. Through planned activities for each day, the group hopes to spread its message to the student body.

Anti-Awareness Weeks Week is organized by Students Against Awareness Weeks, a club in its first year at Agony. According to the group's president, Spiff Bimble, the mission of the organization is to reduce the number of theme weeks on campus. "It is getting ridiculous," said Bimble. "Why, one week in January, it was Celebrate the Palindrome Week. Clean Up Our Language Week, and Anarchy Awareness Week. Wow, it was damn near chaos!"

Students Against Awareness Weeks member Dwayne Skeevy said that the weeks are a distraction to students who are trying to learn.

"Last Friday night, I know many students were looking forward to a quiet night in the dorm studying. However, many felt compelled to attend the closing ceremonies for Drunken Orgy Awareness Week. Poor, poor kids," sympathized Skeevy.

Another member of the group, Nate Schmuth, said that the awareness weeks detract from the seriousness of issues. "I know that hangnails are a huge problem in our society," said Schmuth, "but students who are trying to learn can see how after Hangnail Awareness Week, people who did not previously understand the danger that hangnails pose might just write them off as another silly thing about which to have an awareness week," he said. "These constant awareness weeks make important things seem trivial, even hangnails. I mean, we're talking about hangnails! Hangnails!"

"I agree," said Vice President Carmella Barr. "Awareness weeks are weak," she said, adding, "Ha ha snort, I made a funny."

Anti-Awareness Weeks Week will begin on Monday with a rally in the Super Center, with music provided by the College's own barbershop quartet, Psychos Sex Demons from Hell. Wednesday there will be a dinner in Schmaltz Dining Hall to celebrate the days before awareness weeks.

The menu will include some kind of casserole and probably something vaguely meaty. Thursday, renowned performer Ron O'Vichovich will bring his new Merseybeat band, The Glugs, to the auditorium. "He really doesn't have anything to do with our message," said Bimble, "but he totally rocks!"

Friday, the group plans to set up a table at the post office where students can sign pledges to ignore all future awareness weeks. "Of course, we hope you still come for our big closing party at 8 p.m. in McCrapley's. There will be nine flavors of ice cream!" Barr said.

Student opinion on the week is strong. Senior Barbie Dahl said, "It's great to see people getting excited about what they believe in, even if it's something really, really stupid. That's what our country is all about."

"Yeah," said her boyfriend and fellow senior Bob White. "This is the dumbest idea I've heard in a while, definitely the dumbest in the last five hours," said freshman Enid Goomb.

"Pshaw!" exclaimed her dining companion, freshman Ralph Blimey. "On the contrary, I find it charming, quite. "It sounds like a fine idea to me," said junior Paul Loaf, adding, "Come to the Alpha Sigma Sigma dance party Saturday! It'll be kicking!"

Next week has also been named Consciousness Awareness Week and Hypocrisy Week. For more information about Students Against Awareness Weeks Week, there are probably some posters hanging around somewhere.

Letters to the Preppy

You Suck, and Oh Yeah, You Suck

Dear Preppy,

We would like to take this opportunity to tell you that you suck. I mean, somebody has to let you know, so it might as well be us.

You’re a disgrace to this publication (you suck). What is this, some kind of a joke? Stop picking your ass for one second. Agony costs so much, and to subject us to your embarrassing nomenclature, it’s just unbearable. You see, because we’re so much smarter than you are. You understand.

Allow us to explain.

Agony College must’ve earned its name for a reason. If it isn’t the evil professors giving the angelic students 100+ hours of homework per class, the high class lodgings or the four star dining facilities, I’m sure there are many other reasons that students here feel the hair-pulling, teeth grinding, eyeball bulging stress that they do.

There needs to be some outlets for students to relieve all this stress.

We’ve decided that you’re ugly, hideous, repulsive, downright atrocious, stupid, dumb, doltish, boring, ho-hum, irksome, uninteresting, monotonous, feeble-witted, lazy, indolent, torpid, lethargic, incompetent, unqualified, inadequate, moronic, idiotic, a lame-o, a poser, a thumbsucker, immature, not grown up, half-grown, undeveloped, puerile, selfish, egotistical, self-seeking, doped-up, narcotized, over the hill, and through the woods, to grandmother’s house we go (you suck).

We can’t bear to read another sentence of your shit, yet we do, just to piss ourselves off.

We hope you go to hell, or better yet, that your karma sucks so bad that you come back as Michael Bolton’s sister (you suck). Oh, and one more thing, lest we forget before we go on to law school to share our genius with the world. You’re not funny.

Now don’t give me the same old chicken crap about how going to the Not-So-Wise Center and working out relieves stress — your argument is sure to fall on deaf ears and splatter about the same way as real chicken crap would. I have no time for your shenanigans. My proposition to the Agony Administration is as good as a high priced hooker’s proposition. I believe that if Agony makes more allowances for certain behaviors, then students will be less stressed and in general a bit more tooty smiled.

Upon meandering through the projects, er, dorms, on campus I have noticed two major displays of stress relief. The first thing I noticed is the visible… the destruction of bulletin boards and signs hanging in the cell blocks. Now, being that I have good connections to a resident loser, I know that students have the privilege of paying for their destruction, which can only add to the duress they’re already feeling.

Whose mommy and daddy want to see a college bill for their baby’s destruction? Maybe Charlie Manson’s or Hitler’s, but I don’t even know about that. Let the kids have their fun! What’s a little torn paper? Those resident losers need more work to do anyhow. If they have the extra time to patrol for drunks, they surely have the time to make new signs on a daily basis. So there!

Deadly Beetles in Disguise Prepare to Eat Students

By ABER CROMBIE
Preppy

They fly, they bite, and they smell oh so bad when you smooch them.

It's no news to Agony students that ladybug lookalikes have recently invaded Mudville, swarming by the gazillions over campus. You thought it was just dark clouds that made the sun disappear? Think again. The bugs are coming.

To avoid a campus-wide panic, Agony has refrained from warning students about these nasty pests until they figure out just how to get the situation under control, and rightly so. The Compost has recently uncovered the deadly truth and will now blow the whistle on Agony's best-kept secret: these vermin kill.

Technically known as Asian Iwantoeatchu Beetles from the species Stenopus Magnus Superfluous, these carnivorous insects are virtually harmless by themselves. However, once they gang up on an unsuspecting victim with their pose, it's all over. Think "Power Rangers." Even if you're suspecting, your roast is toast.

"These beetles are very dangerous," said Environmental Science Professor Exoskelton Ton. "They have no mercy. They are ruthless and hungry. Just about all of the time, but their digestive system is fantastically fascinating," he added.

"The Iwantoeatchus take a rather gruesome approach to mealtime after selecting a victim," Ton explained. "With two miniature incisors, they'll eat you right up, but need a little help chewing, especially when they get down to the bone. That's where the posse comes in. When you're a beetle, everybody jumps on the bandwagon," he said.

Iwantoeatchus resemble ladybugs, with their orangish-reddish shells, because they're actually a mutated version of the friendly bug, an experiment gone terribly wrong. Scientists overseas developed the deadly beetle by pairing a ladybug and a mosquito together for some good times — but never expected they would be that good.

The scientists hoped to offer a solution to Europe's hoof and mouth disease by way of the Iwantoeatchu, but to no avail (it's complicated).

So, before these brainy morons realized how bad they bit it, they sent a shipment of Iwantoeatchus over to America, anticipating a hoof and mouth breakout in the states. Instead of catching a disease, however, Americans got eaten. Mmm.

The Iwantoeatchus Beetles have spread quickly from the West Coast and have taken over much of Agony's residence halls since their arrival in town, nicely distracting students from their work. Now, if students want to procrastinate, they go on beetle hunts.

"They're totally gross," said sophomore and Iwantoeatchu hater Helga Beluga. "They were coming in through the windows, and flying into my hair, and crawling into my ears and oh my god!"

Beluga's roommate, sophomore Anna Banana, agreed. "I just can't take it anymore, I just can't I just can't my god," she said, waving her hands in the air. "They smell like butt, you know, when you kill them, and I just can't handle it. My boyfriend won't even come over anymore because our room reeks," she added, fainting.

Mudville residents, anticipating the backlash of beetle mania, were recently spotted by The Compost stockpiling on bottled water and ammunition.

"You can't be too careful," said Doug "Bull" Jones, a dedicated Mudville resident. His wife, Bonnie, said she hopes to collect the beetles in a jar for her grandchildren.

"You don't understand," she said. "This is the best thing that's happened to Mudville since Sharon Stone."

During The Compost's investigation, President Crook told suspicious students to "stay calm" and "eat their vegetables," but students themselves seem to be the only thing on the menu these days.

Until Agony tracks down an exterminator, The Compost suggests that students kill two birds with one stone. Staying covered up in their beds for the rest of the semester. This way, they can 1) avoid being the main course, and 2) sleep. Enough said.

SHOWERS from the Antarctic

an altogether different answer. In one of his interviews with a student test subject, Outthere noticed something interesting.

"I have been very busy recently with midterms, and I have sort of fallen behind on my sleep. Despite this fact, I used to get up early every morning to take a shower. However, I have pretty much given up showering since they are generally too cold for me to stand," explained sophomore Ima Little-Stinky.

"The time in the morning that I save by cutting out showering allows me to sleep an extra half an hour. This extra time really helps a lot, but I am not sure the people who sit next to me in class are too thrilled!"

This bit of information led Outthere to change his main arguments. The release of the information to the Death Center began a massive campaign to redo all the showers on campus.

"Studies done in the last couple of weeks back up the idea that cold showers are perhaps most healthy for the students at Agony College," President Crook said. "In fact, we are hoping that by fall 2002, all the dorms will be equipped with these hot water restricting devices."

Weight Room Etiquette

By M & M
Melts in Your Hand

Springtime always attracts a large crowd to Agony's Slow-Witted Center. Girls want to work off that thingys that stick on the ends of those silver poles are for. Ask a guy to pick up the weight for you — that's the only way to get a really good workout.

4. Check your weight on the scale after every exercise; you'll see significant changes within minutes. If you don't, blame it on the scale, yeah, yeah.

5. Stand in front of the weight room mirrors all the freakin' time. Giving your body evil stares is a really effective weight loss method.

6. Congregate around the mirrors with your friends. Compare body fat, and motivate each other by pointing out that other girls in the gym look a hell of a lot better than any of you.

7. Giggle when a guy looks at you. That's always attractive.

8. Stay on the sit-up mat for a long time, and when people come near you, start counting high, even though you maybe be too busy napping to care.

9. Steroids are for boys. It's all about the herbal supplements, ladies. Remember — girls don't sweat, they glisten...but try not to glisten too much, because that's just disgusting.

For girls:
1. The tighter the clothes the faster the calories burn. Seriously, if you wear spandex and sports bras when you work out they will squeeze the body fat right out of you. You'll feel the burn more efficiently.
2. Wear plenty of makeup. You won't sweat at all while you're at the gym, so an abundance of mascara, lipstick and eyeliner is a crucial part of the workout experience.
3. Act stupid. Pretend you have no clue what those silly little black disc-things that stick on the ends of your teeth are for. Let a guy to pick up the weight for you — that's the only way to get a really good workout.
4. Don't talk to any other guys in the gym; give the head nod instead — why speak when you never have anything interesting to say, anyway? Spotters are for babies.
5. Don't wipe the sweat off the machines after you use them, just leave it there. Mark that territory like you know how.
6. Classes are secondary. Pump it all day, and all night.

With these tips in mind, you'll be fit in no time!
Bowie Could Make This Labyrinth Complete

By VIK KARATE

As a third year student at Agony, I was almost ashamed to admit that I didn’t know where a lot of our general establishments were. WFART, for example, our college radio station—where is that? And exactly how many computer labs do we have? And where are they? And for the love of God, can I use them?

There’s nothing worse than the overwhelming paranoia of whether or not you’ll walk into a computer lab during a class. The professor stares at you like you should have known not to come in there in the first place—isn’t that small piece of paper with its microscopic font list of the available lab times good enough for you?

But this is all small potatoes to the Lazy Pellets Here library, better known as a maze, or an abyss into which the one book you’re looking for is nowhere to be found, even though it says that the book is available when you look it up on the computer screen. It is in that establishment where I find myself spending more time looking for things than getting any actual work accomplished.

First of all, I would like to refer back to when the “prestigious” publication The Campus ran a story on the new so-called lounge in Pellets Here. Correct me if I’m wrong, my fellow Agonians, but weren’t those chairs always there? Isn’t the new lounge just, in fact, like a new atrium? Perhaps this new foliage makes for a more relaxing environment, but let’s be honest with each other: we’ll know a new lounge when we see one.

There’s also the issue of how to get inside of the library, as well. Shannon Mangoes, a junior, recently confessed that she did not know how to gain access to the basement. “I’ve given up on using a couple sources in my papers and stuff because I didn’t know how to get there. I was afraid that if I opened the wrong door sirens would go off,” she lamented.

Apparently, Mangoes is not the only one who’s been having that sort of trouble. Pete Nachos, another junior, has recently come forward and admitted that he, too, did not know how to reach the bottom level. “I had seen people in there before, so I knew that there had to be a way to get there. But then I thought maybe it was some sort of secret room that only the employees had access to,” Nachos said.

Nachos eventually got lucky and saw another student use the stairway to get there. Of course, Nachos and Mangoes could have avoided this mishap and saved a lot of time by just asking one of the many employees where everything is located, but alas, they were too embarrassed.

So issue number one is solved: if students don’t know where anything is in Pellets Here, just ask. My next gripe is not so much to do with the set up of the library, as it does with the entrance to the Library. When exactly was the last time students used the steps without exercising extreme caution? The recently spring-like weather (read: cold rain and snow) has caused many students to avoid the steps completely. “I took one look at those icy steps and thought ‘no way’,” said Agony student Jenny Green. “I walked the whole way around just to steer clear of those.”

And, of course, the many repairs over the years haven’t helped either (read: putting orange tape around stairs to make it look like construction is underway). Perhaps Let’s Get Physical Plant workers just rotate the orange tape to whichever part of the stairs is in the most dilapidated state. One would think that once stairs have been repaired with bricks and mortar multiple times and they still keep falling apart, that the notion to try something else would eventually strike.

“I’m all about conserving the antiquity of our college, but when my limbs depend on it, I think it might be time to modernize,” said Jeremy Midnight, a senior.

PLEASANT THOUGHTS
—a column by Theo Rhetoric

This week, the fun-loving students of Agony College will marvel at the completion of another edition of The Compost, an annual publication that tells the truth about life in the Meadville sun in ways that The Campus could only dream about. Yet some might be dismayed to find that Matt Meehan, unfunny-hack-in-residence, is absent from this year’s pullout section. Last year his column was replaced by a paid advertisement in which a jealous reader listed several deficiencies in his character, hoping to sway readers away from enjoying his weekly offering, “Unpleasant Thoughts.” It didn’t work.

So why, then, are there no verbal meanderings from everyone’s favorite slightly built editorialist in this week’s issue? It seems he’s laying low on Pittsburgh’s East End, where nobody expecting to find something or someone interesting would ever think to look. But we at The Compost are smarter than that. I mean, isn’t The Compost such a clever name? We think so. Our crack investigative reporter, Bastard Media, caught up with Matt in his Edgewood bunker for a few questions.

Bastard Media: So, Matt, how are you enjoying your weekend off?

Matt Meehan: Pretty good. I just finished watching a great movie called “My Date With the President’s Daughter.” It had it all: car chases, bikers, and Datney Coleman as President of the United States. He’s no Martin Sheen or anything, but I’d vote for him.

MM: So your editor claims to have no idea why you refused to write a piece this week. What’s the deal?

BM: I write a humor piece every week for these people, and then they open the floodgates once a year and let everyone and their grandmother write satiric articles. Suddenly everyone’s a comedian. And I don’t like to have to compete for attention. Life’s a circus, baby, and I’m in the center ring.

BM: So you just flat-out refused to share the spotlight?

MM: For sure. I call it “Operation Shutdown.” Go ahead and quote me—see if I care. Sucker.

BM: Don’t call me that.

MM: I’ll call you whatever I want. You’re lucky you can bask in my reflective glory, backlit by the glint from my 22-inch rims.

BM: You know, you really are arrogant. You must be an Aries.

MM: You got that right. But I wouldn’t say I’m arrogant, just war-like. Those who know me personally know I’m much more down to earth than I would ever want media types like yourself to know about.

BM: But it’s generally inadvisable to cross your path, you’re saying?

MM: Especially during this time of year—that’s when the planets are aligned in my favor. Everything’s coming up Meehan, you know. But I try not to think about that astrology bullshit too much, or else I always end up getting that “Age of Aquarius” song stuck in my head. It’s rough.

BM: Yeah, that can be a bitch. So people are dying to know a few things about you, and they e-mailed some questions about your everyday life. Care to field a few?

MM: Sure, I’ll answer any fan questions. I used to have a fan mail account, but I closed it when they started syping on people back in September. I also keep a close watch for those roving wiretaps. You might not want to let me use your phone.

BM: Remember this is all on the record. Anyway, name three things that can always be found in your refrigerator.

MM: Margarine, milk, and Miller High Life. They mix surprisingly well. I invented a drink called a Cow Piss the other day. You wanna try one?

BM: Unah... no thanks. High Life tastes enough like cow piss as it is.

MM: Hey, watch it.

BM: I’m prepared to deal with the consequences. Another reader wants to know what is the hardest part about being a decomboped senior. Any thoughts?

MM: Nope. Having thoughts is the hardest part about it. I’d have to say, I’m practically brain-dead from all of the decadent living and sleeping late.

BM: Is there really that much opportunity for decadence in Meadville? I thought it was a pretty boring place...

MM: You’d be surprised. You know, it’s all what you make of it. We may not get to riot when our basketball team beats Kansas, but we know how to come up with an excuse to party.

BM: Yeah, I think I’ve seen you around. You don’t seem like the type who really even needs an excuse. You’re quite the social butterfly. Now here’s a fan who wants to know which of Pittsburgh’s Three Rivers is your favorite.

MM: That’s a tough one. The Ohio is just lame. The Allegheny is where they get my drinking water, as well as the water that goes into Iron City Beer. But the Monongahela is where I fish, it’s rumored to have a World War II bomber buried in its muddy depths, and it’s where I hid the body of the last reporter who called me a social butterfly. So back up off me, ya hear? I hope that answers your questions.

BM: It should suffice. I should probably ask one question before we go any further. Are you aware of this paper’s verbal harassment policy? Because I think you should be, before you go on any more of your profanity-laced diatribes.

MM: Yeah, I’m aware of it. I wrote it, remember? I also invented the profanity-laced diatribe, so don’t go telling me when I can and can’t use them. Capice?

BM: Yes, I guess I understand. Anything else to say to your public before I end this interview and rush to the post office to write about what a dick you are?

MM: Sure. Don’t believe a word this asshole says about me. You shouldn’t believe the media. Anyway, you know you love me all...

BM: Well, our time is up. Thank you for the interview and have a fantastic day.

MM: You’re welcome. I’m glad I was able to provide you with the biggest story you’ll ever write in your crappy, soon-to-be-over journalism career. I’m going to get some grub, so stay out of my way.

BM: That won’t be a problem. Jerk.
Buckle Up for the Agony 500 on N. Main

Agony College announced this week their long-awaited plan to transform N. Main St. Surprisingly, President Crook made the proclamation that the inaugural Agony 500 would take place at this year’s Homecoming. It will replace the annual parade.

"We felt the inherent danger of N. Main would be represented a lot better if we showcased it for the alumni...no one really thinks that parade is what Agony’s about," Crook said. "We’ve wanted to get the Mudville community involved, and we thought this was a great idea!"

In order to get Agony ready for the ESPN event, N. Main and Park will be closed from the start of the year as the grandstands are constructed. Crook said the funds generated from the race will go towards Agony programs.

"We really hope the kids get involved. We know how pissaed they get at the traffic, so this is their big chance to get back at Mudville!" Crook said.

Crook also announced that prospective Agony student Britney Spears as the Grand Marshal. "We all remember how intent she was on coming to Agony a couple years back, and we were thrilled when she wanted to come back for the race," Crook said. "And plus, that should ensure we get about 75,000 screaming 12-year olds too, not to mention every guy. It’ll be a good time."

Sears was equally excited. "Hey, since I broke up with Justin, I’ve wanted to come up with something to do, and Agony sounded like a good idea! President Crook is soooooo dreamy. It’s like, awesome!" she said.

The Counting Crows were scheduled to provide the entertainment, but once they were informed it was Agony, they pulled out of the show. "Why do we wanna come to some race? It’s not like we ever wanted to come in the first place, why now!" the band said in a press release.

Agony students had mixed reactions to the race. "Yeah the race is cool and all, but it’s gonna take away from that beer bash on Loomis. Man, all those cars are gonna give me a headache," sophomore Mo Natty said. "Maybe if I could put that manic in the pickup truck who almost broke my damn leg last week on the track, then hell yeah, I’d be down!"

First-year Yousa Ho was ecstatic. "Like, this is awesome! It’ll like, totally, like, yeah, give me something to do! Hopefully, like, it’s, like, sunny, so I can get a totally awesome tan. Yeah Agony!!"

Crook admitted that the idea from the race was spawned from The Campus. "Man, those people talked about N. Main so much, I got sick of hearing about it. Then I figured, what the hell, Mudville needs some fun, so we’ll shut those damn fools at The Campus up. I wanted to ride in on my motorcycle, but I can’t find the keys to the Harley, damnit! I’m pissed. I wanna take some people out!" Crook said.

ESPN analyst Dick Vitale is scheduled to be one of the all-star drivers in the race. "It’s awesome baby! It’s super, sensational, scintillating! I’m a PPPPer baby! It’s almost as awesome as Duke baby! I love the Dookies baby!"

Crook was also thrilled to announce that Agony coaches will participate in the race. "Man, after the ‘Steelers’ whooped them in that basketball game, I figured I’d give them a chance to make up for it, and while I’m at it, who were those guys? Wasn’t it supposed to be the 2001 Steelers? Man, I remember those guys from when I was in high school, and they still lost. I’m sure glad I didn’t play!" Crook said.

Tickets for the Agony 500 will go on sale as soon as the seats are finished. "They’ll be $200 apiece. Hey, after all, like, everything’s, like, so expensive here anyway, so, like, that’s a deal!" Ho said.

The Terds win. The Terds win. Yeah, yeah, so now I’m a Merryland fan too! We go to a Division 3 school, and so I have the right to like who I want at any given time. The day that Merryland Bandwagon President Surprisingly, President Crook made the proclamation that the inaugural Agony 500 would take place at this year’s Homecoming. Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): It be easier touching your toes if you keeps them close to your chest. Though they jingle more when you walk, using your keys for earrings is impractica-le.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Libras are festive trouser people. They like to chew all of the food on their plate, whether they plan to swallow or not. Libra's love to sing along.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Scorpio, your moon is aligned with Uranus, so things are moving well this month.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You draw your little cell phone from the fast action Velcro pouch and dial your pager number. It rings once, twice, again, click and you listen for the beep. You don't say anything. You hate when people do that.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): We are sorry Capricorn but to survive this month intact you will have to dance the gobblebottom and share the custody of Rudy the wonderpup-pet.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You ride along on your bike when you meet the June bug of enlightenment and as you lie on the grassy boulevard beneath the stars you crave marzipan.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): Player says go and game makes happy elephant fun before victory and child receives treat is tasting like delicious food or berries.

Aries (March 21-April 19): The cat that sat at the back of the shack looks an awful good look at the spine of the book and he chin whiskered him with a squint of the room and said good enough for goats is good enough for me.

Taurus (April 20-May): You appreciate courtesy, as you are so often politely asked to leave. You really must give up licking your change.

Gemini (May-June 20): Oh yeah. Uh-huh. That's right. You won the Win a Date with Mike Contest with free complimentary golf pants, and the use of a sycophant for the afternoon. Mike Harris, your green fees at work.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): You sneeze and a butterfly pops out of your snout. The butterfly sneezes and a bubble pops out. The bubble pops and startles the penguin. The penguin falls off the tree branch. The terrier grins.
