

Autobiography - Women

Somehow I must without <sup>define</sup> ~~defending~~ say and treat <sup>ing</sup> it as a commonplace that it is the great personalities among women that have really interested me, not their achievements.
When I came to study women of achievement and found how much the ambitions submerged the person, not always but often, they dwindled. It has been my fortune to know some great personalities.
I think Viola Roseboro should come into the story; I think I could include Mrs. Coburn and Mrs. Grinsley - the effect they produced upon me. I find it is rare. If I tried to bring in Elisabeth Marbury - I have some facts - probably there the real fact is that Elisabeth's wickedness delighted me. Her variety of interests fascinated me ~~because~~ she was a traitor

Trade - story of her rabble - politici - children -