

to a laboring mass. What this laboring mass has done, the way that is is lifting, organizing, educating itself. It is not only in the laboring mass that you find these developments following new lines according to the discovered needs, opportunities. In the organization and creating departments of industry there is the same upward tendency. The woman as a builder of businesses, contributor of independent activities, is a unfamiliar only to the vague general public. She is an existing and important factor; she is to be found in every occupation and in certain occupations she is as powerful as man himself. —

Employee number - see Wolman p 133 et seq.