How much did our non-cost us in one war period. See calculation in Summary Section. p. 32.

What would the full army equipment - fuel, guns, etc. - have cost us if we had come out? What did actually cost? What yield? What would an army use? How much? What would it have cost? What would it have cost 1861-75?
Mr. R. lived a hard life because he had earned nothing. The country was too far away.

P. Sherman born in 1792 - a boy whose great ambition was to live in motion, a farm of 250 acres 14 corn & an occasional good piece to do in the church, basketball. He never had any luck with his efforts. He graduated at 23 from Southwestern College, went to Pa. to become a lawyer. He was an absentee by default. He was a lawyer because he was a church deacon. Made history; became involved in politics. Elected as a state senator, representative in Congress; sent to the White House as an assistant to President. He served in Congress. He made a trip in 1893 on that cause. Took part in fighting in the war. Made a trip in Europe making the trip from Europe. He was elected to Congress in 1849. Died in 1850 and buried in [place].

There was a body of people—men, women, and children—who were welcomed by the town. Anything a person had to carry on their person was a tax. The town also had a lowing alley (well, let's say 22). They paid a tax on their wares, and on their inheritances in their possession of all sorts of carriages, goods, and other personal items. They paid a tax on their money, even on their money. At the same time, they paid...

One of the most sensible pieces of financial advice I have ever seen in literature is the advice given in "David Copperfield" by Mr. Micawber.
At first one doubts whether it is selfish, small-minded, but that only makes it the more valuable.

In Micawber's advice, one must "depend entirely in your memory of what you were pleased to call a friend." He reminds us that if a man were to spend 20 pounds a year in this manner, he would be happy, but if he spent 20 pounds a year, he would be miserable.
