

April 13, 1933

My dear Mr. Clark:

Thank you for your letter of April 10th calling my attention to the errors in my life of Owen D. Young. You call them unimportant details - no detail, however small, is unimportant in tracing the life and activities of a man. One can never tell how the effect of what is called a minor error may have on the whole structure. Possibly the wrong address for the General Electric office might mean little, except that I have been careless with this something to me. But who can tell to what confusion it might possibly lead sometime.

As to the misspelling of the name of Charles Vanderpoel, I consider that far from a minor error. I am grateful to you for calling my attention to these points, and if you should happen on anything else in the book, errors of fact or errors of implication, I shall appreciate your calling my attention to them.

Very truly yours

Mr. Wm. M. Clark
