Dear Miss Tarbell:

I have no objection to your quoting from my letter. It would interest me though to look at what you intend to quote because I have discovered that sentences removed from their context frequently carry an impression which is quite different from what was intended by the writer and even by the person making the quotation. In your case, I do not regard this as a serious risk, but if it be convenient for you to let me have the quotation, it will at least discharge you from all responsibility about it.

Sincerely yours,

Miss Ida M. Tarbell,
