New York City.

Dear Miss Tarbell:

A year or so ago when I greeted you at the Book Club you cautioned me that you did not want to go so far as the Middle West for lectures. Nevertheless, we keep getting inquiries each year from persistent committees who will not take No for an answer. I would like to have you for a few days in the fall of 1935 - say only four - to satisfy our clients. We would try to make the travel easy and make it pleasant for you in every way. We would get the dates filled before the bad weather.

Only yesterday I read in one of the Sunday magazines of a New York paper a short article by Andre Maurois in which he said people are only as old as they feel; that he knew men eighty years old who were younger in spirit and in the work they were doing than many men of sixty. You see I am furnishing you with a good argument for granting our request.

Yours very truly,
