LIFE OF THOMAS CARLYLE, Vol. I, Pages 22-23

By Froude.

Besides all this we boasted ourselves a rational university, in the high est degree hostile to mysticism. Thus was the young vacant mind furnished with much talk about progress of the species, dark ages, prejudice and the like, so that all were quickly blown out into a state of windy argumentativeness, whereby the better sort had soon to end in sick impotent scepticism; the worser sort explode in finished self-conceit, and to all spiritual interests become dead. . . The hungry young looked up to their spiritual nurses, and for food were bidden eat the east wind. What vain jargon of controversial metaphysics, etymology, and mechanical manipulation falsely named Science was current there, I indeed learned better than perhaps the most. Among eleven hundred Christian youths there will not be wanting some eleven eager to learn. By collision with such, a certain warmth, a certain polish was communicated; by instinct and by happy accident I took less to rioting than to thinking and reading, which latter also I was free to do. Nay, from the Chaos of that library I succeeded in fishing up more books than had been known to the keeper thereof. I learned on my own strength to read fluently in almost all cultivated languages, on almost all subjects and sciences. A certain ground plan of human nature and life began to fashion itself in me, by additional experiments to be corrected and indefinitely extended.

Summary
~~Biography:~~

J.S.P. calls my attention to Mark Twain's bright estimate on the materials for the Life of Joan of Arc - that it was the only life that we have where the materials are recorded under oath. It is interesting to note that these records show how the thing of which Joan was proud was the thing which condemned her in the eyes of her Judges.

The records on St. Paul also should be noted under Material. They are from a great variety of sources and the very eager statements can be made the basis for establishing travels, acts, etc., etc.
