

July 1, 1921

Mrs. H. A. Cook,
1104 Ditmas Avenue,
Brooklyn, N.Y.

My dear Mrs. Cook:

You were very good to write me so kind a note, and it would have had an answer before this but that I have been buried in a piece of imperative work which was finished only last night, and this morning I am attacking a lot of belated mail.

You are right in supposing that my work in Industrial Management was interrupted by my illness. I had a rather wretched time all through the spring, which broke my plans all to pieces.

The articles in Industrial Management were out short because of business conditions. It did not seem to the editors that at a time when there was so much unemployment it was particularly useful to exploit a new labor source, and that it would be much wiser to hold back until business was good again before we went on with the articles. There will be one more in July, I believe, and that will be all for the present.

I am staying out of town most of the time now, but as soon as I am here regularly again, I am going to ask you to let me come and make that visit.

Very sincerely yours,