Growth;

If I am to call the Westinghouse growth then let it be emphasized constantly that ~~the~~ growth means ^{in place} decay and ~~corruption~~ ^{corruption}.

I think it might be possible to tell the story
"In High Low Washington" - 65

Perhaps nothing that I have ever heard emphasizes better the fundamental weakness of Hoover. He just can't see that growth means change - things must always be the same, the same G.O.P. the same old high tariff and there we are fixed for ever. in ways of peace and prosperity. Poor Hoover.

From "High Low Washington" Page 63

"A foreign journalist once ventured to suggest to Mr. Hoover that the problems of the United States were not only the problems of growth, but were also the problems of decay. The President threw a startled and displeased look at the speaker and sat silent, brooding. The phrase hung uneasily in his mind for some time. Finally in a public speech he took occasion expressly to emphasize his disagreement with this unpleasant suggestion. "The problems of the United States," he said, "are the problems of growth.
They are not the problems of decay."
