Dear Mr. Latham:

The contract for the publication of my book on the Disarmament Conference found me here last night and I am returning it signed, with the proviso that I may be so disgusted with my stuff that I shall not feel it wise to put it in a book. It looks to me now as if you could count on it for February publication. I must give you the copy by the middle of January, if at all, for in February I have to go barn-storming.

It is not certain of course, when the Conference will end, but even if it is not over by the middle of January, when I propose to get away from here, all that I can say about it will be ready.

Very sincerely yours,
