Dear Miss Tarbell:

With the issue of January, 1937, Scribner's Magazine is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. We hope to make this issue one of unusual interest to our subscribers and to our contributors. From the letters which have come to us, we realize that one of the chief anticipations our readers have is the hope that we will provide them with an opportunity to meet again the writers and artists who have contributed most to the magazine in the past. We would like to reprint dozens of articles, stories and illustrations, but since this is impossible, we are asking our noted contributors to allow us to publish brief letters of comment on their association with the magazine, the part they think it has played in the past and might play in the future. We would greatly appreciate such a letter from you.

The anniversary issue will appear late in December and, as you know, our closing date will be looming before us soon.

Very sincerely yours,

HARLAN LOGAN
