My dear Miss Tarbell:

May I, too, say happy birthday to you? You will have so many letters and telegrams to read that I feel a bit guilty about adding another. But you have been so kind to me on so many occasions - no doubt you have forgotten all about them, but you may be sure I haven't - that I can't resist sending my little message too.

Do you remember how you turned over to me your apartment in Washington for my first three weeks there as a war worker, thereby getting me started off on the right foot as it were? And do you remember how your kindly recommendation made it possible for me to share an apartment with Marion Nims at the Pen and Brush Club when we first came to New York? By the way I am again sharing an apartment with Marion, and I feel sure that she would wish to send her felicitations if she knew I were writing. She is still the same dear girl she has always been, and still, as always, your devoted admirer.

And best of all, do you remember how your kindly interest in my little work at the Woman's Committee and your constructive criticism used to send me from your presence feeling that I could win the war single handed if need were, and overturn the world to boot, given a good running start? Of course you don't remember, though, for you never knew.

But this letter grows much too long, and I haven't even the excuse of the French lady who said she hadn't time to write a short one. Please don't bother to reply; I can easily understand how you haven't time for that.

If you should some day find yourself passing the Frances Building with a moment to spare - we are between 52nd and 53rd Streets - you don't know how happy it would make me to have you look in on us.

With every good wish in the world, I am, as always, with grateful appreciation,

Most sincerely yours,

Elizabeth Green
