Security:

The will to struggle is the base of security. The notion that somebody - friend, family, state - will secure it for you, can make you secure, is false. You can't be made secure indefinitely without your individual effort and that individual effort is based on the will to struggle.

Two things are desirable - freedom and security. There is no freedom where security comes from without. There are two things to will to get the result for which man hopes. There is the will to be free and the will to be secure and both depend on struggle. The will then to struggle is the key to the end which man seeks. There are certain hindrances to freedom which are sometimes considered proofs of freedom - the state of a thing in which you do not believe. There lies an intolerance which may make you incapable of real freedom of spirit. Freedom of spirit means going to the roots of things. Hatred and radicalism is not getting at the real roots. One incumbered with the adaptation of men who have violated the law does not see clear, he sees red.
