Autobiography:

I came to have disrepect for any achievement or opinion that did not have a ~~subject~~, background, did not get somewhere near the root^{of} a thing and understand their nature and the laws that govern the growing of this particular thing. When this outlook ~~passes~~ ^{later lived} itself on one, they become³ very wary of/hasty opinions, hasty laws, hasty undertakings, however fine the intention, how ever reasonable the end sought. An ^{con} attempt for any opinion which is not formed with due regard to the background and experience in its particular field came to be rooted in me. When I found myself swung to an opinion when I personally did not have such a background ^{by my nature} ~~it was~~ my desire to say yes to everybody, to go along with the crowd. I felt misgivings. This is what made me so wary of the Roosevelt program, so unwilling to regard the N R A as the road to the millennium.
