PROLOGUE.

CONVENTION demands that the Editors of the Kaldron beg the pardon of its readers for the infliction imposed on their long-sufferance. We are not going to do so. We have done the best we can. We are sorry that our best is no better, but never mind. Sunt alii.

We have endeavored to get out a true year-book of Allegheny, one that shall recall to its readers the various phases of college life. If in passing through our mill, your self-esteem has been damaged, we offer you our sympathy, but no more. We ourselves have been ground—by our fellow students in former annuals, and by the Faculty in their classes. This is where we get back. So if we have done anything to be sorry for, we are glad of it.

With these few words of preface we recommend the book to your tender mercy.

To the Memory
of

DRAEGER, Donn F. Weapons and fighting arts of the Indonesian archipelago. Tuttle, 1972. 254p il map bibl 73-182060. 12.50. ISBN 0-8048-0674-8

The main theme of this work is that to understand Indonesian culture and art, one must know something of the combative techniques and weapons of its people. In order to make this point Draeger, an authority on traditional Asian forms of combat, traveled widely in the Indonesian Archipelago and reported on the fighting arts from Sumatra to the Moluccas. He interviewed many local native experts in the martial arts and relied heavily, and to good effect, upon their information and help. Profusely illustrated with excellent drawings and black-and-white photographs, this book in informative and thorough in its coverage. The emphasis is on detailed description of techniques and weapons rather than upon the aesthetic and philosophical theory behind their use. One might wish that the writing were a little more elegant, although it is very clear. Those concerned with other Asian forms of fighting such as judo and karate will be interested to note the similarities and differences between their specialties and the Indonesian forms. Indonesian art enthusiasts may learn much from this frequently overlooked aspect of the country's culture. Small bibliography; useful index.

HISTORY.

LET THE festive Prep. subside, and the impudent Freshman stand at respectful attention, while history rescues from Lethe's stream the story of the Class of Ninety-Nine.

In this class, the meekest and mildest that Allegheny ever sent forth, moustached men, downy-cheeked youths, and fair damsels sit down together, and Prexy leadeth them. It is not the purpose of the Historian to trace the mental evolution of each member from the doll and the rattle to Christian Ethics. Suffice it to say, the class of '99 has caught the spirit of the age, and knows how to save itself from exhausting labor. From a Freshman infantry organization, weak and uncertain on foot, it has developed into a Senior cavalry corps, which for grace, ease, and daring can give points to a band of mounted Apaches.

No serious epidemic of matrimony has troubled us during our college course, only three members of the class having succumbed to the arrows of the little god, and two of these were married before they were brought under our blessed influence.

The class has no athletic record behind it. We account for this by the fact that the men of the class are physically rather scrubby. Judged from the scholarly point of view, '99 has no reason to be ashamed. In fact, after graduating us, the Faculty will feel that "Wisdom has departed with us."

Politically, the experience of the class has been most unique. As Sophomores we elected two class presidents. Neither would resign, so the two presided at every meeting. Imagine our feelings, however, at finding, when all classifications were made out, that our two presidents were only Freshmen!

As Juniors, we minded our own affairs and wished we were Seniors. Since becoming Seniors our relations with each other in recitation hall and class meeting have been most pleasant. Everything has been done mildly—even our "kicking."

Our last "kick" was against writing Senior orations. The logical arrangement of our argument was irresistible, and would have gained the day had not those with whom we contended forgotten all the laws of the syllogism.

We have attempted to give the broad outlines of '99's history—for the minutiæ, go to the Faculty.

HISTORY.

IT WAS the custom of the ancients to preface their inspired heroic epics with an invocation to the Muse of Song, couched in terms of florid eloquence and unctious flattery. It is not owing to any disrespect for that estimable female that we omit so important a step in the development of what we feel will be transmitted to future cycles as the history of a class beyond cavil the first in the annals of a century. By no means would we affront the worthy Muse; the cause of the omission is the exigency of space. We have but two pages, to be paid for at a fixed rate per page by an assessment of the individual members of the class. To such base considerations are we perforce reduced.

The class of '00—call it "naughty-naught," or "nineteen hundred," or any other name you please—is, as has already been suggested, the class that stands without dispute at the head of a century of history. I refer, of course, to the century to whose name belongs the distinguished honor of beginning with the mystic number, 19. Perhaps some may question the existence of any mystic properties in those simple digits, but we scorn their base aspersions with hauteur and disdain. We are above such considerations; we waive them altogether. Cadence and euphony demand that it be mystic; mystic it is written, and mystic it shall be.

The title of this class to be called truly great rests upon no temporal or unsubstantial basis; the eternal years of God are hers. The rock of Gibraltar and Kilimanjaro aren't in it. The conviction of our greatness is forced upon mankind by all the profoundest logic of the human reason. The irresistible power of Truth is the foundation on which we base our assertions; we defy the universe to assail us in our impregnable position. Ours is the greatness that rises above the littleness of common things, mocks at time and laugheth at the storm. For are we not the class of '00? What more need be said? "Whatsoever is more than these things shall be as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal," as Shakespeare so touchingly declared.

It is impossible to dwell long upon so exalted a topic as the one before us without experiencing the most profound emotion. Fain would I approach and behold the awful glory face to face, and tell the story to breathless humanity in words of eloquence as grand as the dread grandeur of my theme, but such eternal blazon must not be to ears of flesh and blood. In humility I stand afar off, and contemplate this divine effulgence through a smoked window-glass. Need I record the deed that we have done? the battles fought, the glorious victories won? the tedious toiling upward, step by step, to Junior grandeur from the verdant Prep.? the Sophmore boldness that at Freshmen scoffs? the hardy courage that disdains the Profs.? Why should I write to what we have aspired, how we have struggled and valiantly perspired? Can I transcribe with ink and fragile pen the truths deep-graven on the hearts of men? No! no! may all the gods above forbid! What vengeance might they not wreak if I did? Their wrath concentered on my luckless head, would strike the vile presuming scoundrel dead who durst attempt, with simple mortal tongue, to sing the glories that should rest unsung! Most glorious class! my praise is crude and base; in humble state I can but breathe the prayer that issued from the raptured Roman's breast—Oh! in thy virtue be thou truly blest!

HISTORY.

ING to me, Muse, of some students, some students of old Allegheny,
A wonderful class that will rise with the sun of the early born century;
Who having suffered great woes and been tossed on the billows of Freshman,
After they had sacked and laid waste the citadels lofty of Prepdom,
And having lingered detained in the island and caverns of Sophomore,
Again are about to set sail for the home at the end of their journey.
Hard were the storms we 've endured and many the foes we have vanquished,
Bored out the eye of the monster, the dreadful, the horrible Cyclops,
The Cyclops of Greek and of Latin, of History, Trig., and Gymnasium,
And sometimes escaped from the cave, the cave of the great Polyphemus,
Not always perchance by dumb sheep, but by animals fully as useful.
Not all the companions are there of those that set out on the journey,
Many are lost by the way, overcome by the struggles and conflicts.
Some, Lotus-eaters alluring, have been made forgetful of country,
And another we've shared who was charmed by the voice of a Siren.
But of those that remain, there are none who can ever hope to surpass us
In cerebrum, biceps and voces, in dignity, patriotism, beauty.
Always we've tried to be friendly, and love those who knew less than we did,
Wished to exchange friendly gifts with the Freshmen last fall at their social.
E'en in our glory last year from our dignity high we descended

To agree to take supper with Seniors and Sophomores if they desired;
But fear of our greatness o'ershadowing of the pleasure of our company deprived them.
Then the secrets of sweet college life we opened to four Freshman lasses
When we took a great oath from them to ever bow down in our service.
But not space but the cost of the space and the vacancy in the class treasury
Forbids to sing more of the deeds and the glories of this class illustrious.
Only half of our journey is over, we are still far from sight of the harbor,
And we know that more dangers await us, though the path dips
down o'er the horizon,
Yet the courage and might of the past will surely uphold in the future,
And sometime, too soon then I think we will count it, this will be

Please, Homer, accept these our thanks for the privilege of using your story,
For no less than an epic was needed to do justice to such might and glory.

HISTORY.

O SHADES of Herodotus! O Muse of History! hover over me and inspire me as I undertake the stupendous task of writing the History of the Freshman Class!

Were I to write of the strength of Hercules, the wisdom of Socrates, the oratory of Demosthenes, the valor of Washington, or the patience of Job, it would be far easier than to write the history of 1902, for in this class are found many just as richly endowed by the gods.

Truly we have a wonderful class and we entered college in a wonderful year. During this year a successful war has been brought to a close and the peace treaty has been signed.

"We have met the enemy and they are ours." Instead of learning to wield effectively the sword, many Cubans have come to our shores to learn to wield effectively the pen. The Class of 1902 claims the honor of being the first to welcome to its ranks one of this former down-trodden people.

Of our class we say:

"In this first year we are only Freshmen,
But of the extraordinary kind;
With not a great deal of curiosity,
But indeed a great deal of mind.
We have stored up possibilities
And considerable energy,
'Twould take a wonderful prophet
To tell what we will be."

In athletics we take a back seat for none. We have foot ball players, basket ball players, and we hold our own in base ball. Our class has furnished more men for athletics than any other class.

Soon after the election of class officers we issued a challenge to the wily Sophs. to meet us on the gridiron, the diamond, and on the gym. floor; but the blustering, warlike(?), ever victorious (in their own estimation) Sophomores turned like the little dog whose bark is worse than his bite and we haven't heard from them since.

Our loyalty has been shown, our courage is evident, our class spirit is ever present. The class of 1902 has established a precedent in Allegheny College for having class socials. Although the upper classmen laughed at us, and our brave (?) Sophs. showed fight, as cowards do, nevertheless they all wished us success and hoped that more of the true college spirit would be present in time to come.

During the fall term the Freshmen held their social in the College Chapel. It had previously been draped with the class colors, cardinal and cream, and also with college colors, gold and blue. All had a pleasant time regardless of the fact that some of the little boys and girls from the Sophomore class tried to disturb us.

The next morning we lined up for the class rush; but the Sophomores———where were they?

Since that morning the Sophomores have been singing:

"Oh where, oh where is our little flag gone,
Oh where, oh where can it be,
With its colors of white and lavender,
Oh where, oh where can it be?"

Seek for it where it may be found!

During the year success has crowned all our efforts, failure has been given to the Sophomore. A new era has begun in the college since our entrance. Our start has been propitious to an amazing degree, and we are confident that our end will be glorious; because—

Class of '02 has all of these,
Patience, wisdom, power to please,
Prudence, music, friends true blue,
For all the gods love 1902.

A College Tragedy.

He entered a Freshman,
  Both artless and green;
His age was bright red,
  And his hair was nineteen.

With self satisfied air
  He walked round all the while,
With his pockets in his hands
  And a face on his smile.

But he met a Hall girl
  At the very first start,
And at once his great throat
  Leaped into his heart.

He wooed her till he wore out
  His best Sunday clothes,
At the pants of his knees
  And the shoes of his toes.

But the maiden with scorning
  His pleading did hear,
Then spurned him away
  With a face on her sneer.

The young man lost his mind,
  And went straightway insane,
And cut a great knife
  With his jugular vein.

Soliloquy of a Suffermore.

To skip or not to skip,
That is the question,
Whether 'tis better in the class to risk
The bluffing out of lessons unprepared,
Or, by not staying, flee them.
To stay—to flunk. Aye, there's the rub!
For by that certain flunk, what marks may come
When failures in the end are added up,
Must give us pause.
For who would have a zero on the book,
When by finesse, a little contemplation,
A word or two dropped in the Professor's ear
The absence is excused and we are saved?

March Militaire.

With Apologies to J. R. S.

A man on a piano-forte grand
Played sweet music to beat the band,
    A thing terribly rare,
    Called the March Militaire,
Which 's fame it went through the broad land.
One day as his fingers pell mell,
Struck something that sounded like—well,
    I 've heard people say
    The stool slipped away
And under the piano he fell.

"A True Story."

'Twas Chestnut street, the day was bright,
    The air was calm around,
When from the Conservatory near
    Came forth a doleful sound.

It louder grew, it wailed and wailed,
    It grew into a roar,
At last it broke into a shriek,—
    And then was heard no more.

Two workmen in the road near by
    Left off their work to know
What meant these woeful, gruesome sounds,
    And Mike said unto Joe—

"Ah! This is music that we hear."
    But Joe took him down a peg.
"Naw; that over there 's a hospital,
    And they 're cuttin' off a leg."

Two ladies passing the Conservatory and hearing peculiar sounds within, the one was heard to remark,—"Dear me! what do you suppose is the trouble in there?" The other answered, "Oh, nothing. That is only Mr. Ervin singing his drinking song."

Mr. Comstock in Theory class: "Mr. Harcke, will you play and analyze a dance for next lecture?"

Mr. Harcke—"I don't know any."

Mr. Comstock—"What! have you never played any of those of Mozart,—Beethoven,—Chopin,—Mendelssohn?"

Mr. H.—(shakes head.) "No."

Mr. C.—"I really would recommend some of them to you—they 're rather pretty!"

By Telephone.

Hello, ya dat's I'm—yes, Heink—vat you say? I not use der telephone pefore, spik louter. Vat?—Yes, dat's I'm. Ya, now dat ees fine.—Yes, I dink so nieder, aber Herr Bresident, der standard must pe raised und mit dese dumb Americans dat dake dime. Ach ya,—vat?—you know nod how do dreat a creat ardist. Nein, I vill nod sink oder blay vor you. Vat?—yes, dat ees my method. Vat you say?—b-r-rrrr——Zum Teuful noch a mal.

Three Little Maids from School.

Right pretty girls of fair renown,
Together they tramp o'er the streets of the town,
They peel their eyes and sharpen their ears,
(Wise they are beyond their years.)
They look, they smile, their eyes grow big,
"Great Scott," cries one, "I see a Sig."

A Game of Hearts.

She wasn't a real little summer girl,
Nor he a summer man,
But each had made for each one's self
A wicked little plan
To put in operation as soon as June began.

She said, "This month I'm going to play
At a winning game of love,
And every man I meet in June,
I'll come out one above."
He said, "The heart of every maid
I see in June I'll win—
And break it if I want to—
'Tis but a trifling sin."
And so they met—this silly girl
And the would-be summer man,
And they really truly fell in love
Before July began!
O! then it was they were ashamed
To think what might have been.
But they were safe; for real true love
Is a game where two may win!

If up the street you sometimes tear,
(Because you want to save a fare,)
And pass that building big and bare,
Where one is taught to play with care,
And sing with that dramatic air,
By a superb, distinguished Herr,
Don't stand with open mouth and stare,
Look pleasant, a smile convenient wear,
If sound so sweet and sound so rare
Comes floating from that building bare,
I'll whisper low (I do not dare
To speak aloud the words so rare)
"It is Herr Heink's March Militaire."

Heinklets.

Heink—Yes, I know, Miss A—— haf had no harmony, but she ist not zu be ein artist, but ein teacher, and does not need ze harmony. I gifs her ein teacher's diploma.

Heink—(15 minutes later.) Yes, I know, Miss B—— haf had no harmony, but she ist zu be ein artist, if she were zu be ein teacher, I gif her harmony, but I just gif her ein artist's diploma.

"Beethoven's works are no goot."—Felix Heink.

Heink—Why Miss H——t, you afraid to play at a recital, where there won't be a person knowing anything about music, yet you play before ME?

"How many students were there at Utica, Mr. Harcke?" "When Mr. Heink went there, they had over one hundred, but when he left there were about fifty—but it wasn't his fault, really it wasn't."

We have found a most remarkable instance of talent "running in families." Madame Schumann-Heink was once married to Felix Heink's brother, which accounts for her wonderful voice. It is a pity our Director hasn't more brothers to marry some of his pupils.

"Knowledge is a goot thing to haf."—Heink.

"Heart is a word that may mean different parts of the body."—F. Heink.

After Herr Heink's concert last fall, he was heard to remark that Meadville people would not hear him play again unless they paid him fifty dollars.—Will some one please solve this conundrum:—When, where and what did Alphi Chi Omega fraternity do to win the favor of Herr Heink to such an extent as to be honored every Saturday night with a concert, from 8 to 11 o'clock, by the aforesaid artist, assisted by his devotee, Walter Swisher?

Lover's Lane.

Dedicated to All Who Have Been There.

We walked together, she and I,
Adown old Lover's Lane.
Upon my arm her soft hand lay,
I longed to hold it there alway,
With youth and love our hearts were gay
In Lover's Lane.

We lingered where the shades were deep,
Adown old Lover's Lane.
A radiant moon shone silver bright
Upon a glistening world, that night,
The wind swept by so soft and light,
In Lover's Lane.

We stood together, she and I,
Adown old Lover's Lane.
We felt the evening's magic glow.
We kissed each other. None can know
How sweet those kisses, till they go
Down Lover's Lane.

That College Piano.

Of college belongings
This was the first,
Of ear-splitting noises
Its is the worst.

It stands up in front
On its three crooked legs,
And for some one to play it
It plaintively begs.

It vents its hot rage
On the innocent Preps,
And the language they use
Would not add to their reps.

It weeps and it worries,
It quivers and shakes,
It pours out its wrath
In a thousand mistakes.

Let us hope 'twill soon go
With its thumpety-thump
To the tin-can, its sister,
Out on the dump.

This college is a slot machine,
Religion its chief feature.
Drop almost anybody in
And get him out a preacher.

Maxwell, D. D.

A friendly old gent,
So meek and content,
  Blew into our town one day;
He was so much delighted
With the things that he sighted
  That he made up his mind to stay.

He rides a fine wheel
Of bright shining steel,
  And tries all the records to break ;
He always will win
And rake in the tin
  If there's more than a quarter at stake.

As he showed us last winter,
He's quite a good sprinter,
  And knows how to handle his feet;
If he keeps up the gait,
We all know the fate
  Of the track men he chances to meet.

Just think how we'd grieve,
If ever he'd leave,
  And settle in some other land;
Our hearts all would go
With him whom you know
  As Maxwell, the grand old man.

Dooley on Allegheny.

"BY THE way, Hinnissy, I've been readin' about Allegheny in the nointy-noine katalog," said Mr. Dooley to his friend. "'Tis a school where they have riprisintatives of the very bist families studyin' Hoyle and preparin' fer th' ministry. 'Tis a Christhian college, they tell me, but not denominational, meanin' that a two doilar bill is as good as two wans. 'Tis a school, th' katalog says, made famous be great men, it says, meanin' two bishops, me friend Mack, and th' faculty. Th' students is mostly preachers an' T. N. E.'s, happy, industhrious an' stujous, but lawless an' savage in their methods an' amusements. Th' students belongs to th' Y. M. C. A. an' th' Salvation ar-r-my. Th' r-rest goes into th' discard or th' frats, which gives wan par-r-ty a ter-rum havin' no dancin' at thim, but openin' thim with prayer and Gospel Hims No. 4.

"The students has been threated so well be the faculty they're now up in ar-rms agin thim, except a majority iv thim which is thruly loyal, and does light wurruk around the college, drawin' their pay from th' Idicational S'ciety. Stujents can live, th' katalog says, fer $8.40 per thirty days, it says, not allowin' fer oyster supper-rs an' th' like, it says, which costs more, it says. There is girls at Allegheny, livin' at Hulings, which is th' work 'ouse fer wimin, being presided over, th' katalog says, be a motherly body, it says, which is all right, it says, though havin' to keep th' girls in tree weeks fer bein' late in comin' from pr-rayer-r meetin'.

"'Tis a gloryus school wid a still more gloryus prisidint, which plays wan night sthands at popular prices, tin, twinty an' thir-rty cints, in th' countr-ry disthricts, gettin' muney from refor-r-med lawyers and gr-rocers fer th' indowment which is needed fer new buildin's fer th' stujents t' paint be night. Th' prisidint also fires th' stujents fer infr-racshuns of th' rules which no one knows but th' faculty, which fergits thim till some wan breaks thim.

"Th' social life is plisint, bein' made up of rides on th' canal an' gettin' crabs in Cimitery ravine. Th' faculty gives reciptions in th' jim, which is j'yous occashuns, th' students stealin' th' ice cream an' sellin' it t' pay their lab fees to Monty, which is the deputy sheriff. There 's a library, too, Hinnissy, which is open at all hour-rs whin th' stujents is all busy, havin' governmint reports on pink-eye among hogs and th' spread iv patents. Th' Sunday Priss is also on file, as is Jawnny Ham-nit.

"'Tis a grand place, Hinnissy, or me friend Mack would niver have taken two weeks schoolin' there or come back to addhress th' stujents in later years, Hinnissy, an' tellin' thim of his college days fer $250 per hour-r. I dinnaw but I 'll sind me bye there, Hinnissy, an' let him see th' flag which was carried in th' civil war-r be students which lived too soon, as Casey says, an' never ate embalmed beef.

"There is letthers in th' college safe, Hinnissy, from Imperor Willyum, Queen Victoria, Thomas Jefferson, Kid McCoy, La F'yitte, Lydia Pinkham, and Fitzsimmons. They have athletics, too, Hinnissy, which is played be Spaniards an' goes around th' country havin' sad but gloryous days."

Condensed Verse.

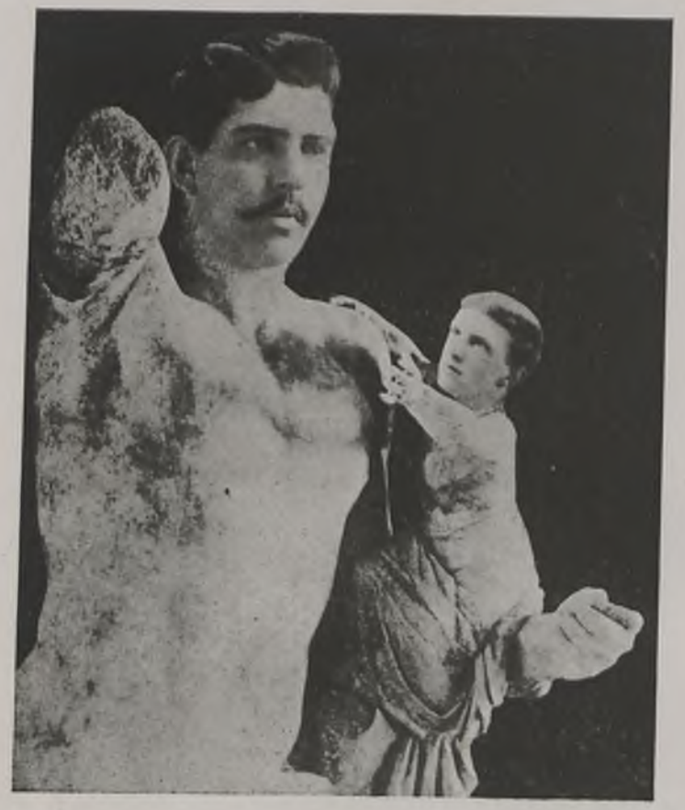

Row-boat
Nice boy,
Pretty girl,
Much joy.

Lone canal,
Rising moon,
No one near,
Lovers spoon.

Time flies,
Must go back,
Boat turned,
Homeward track.

Rules strict,
Hulings Hall,
Girl punished,
That's all.

"Mercury and the Infant Bacchus."

(With apologies to Praxiteles.)

Buckie and Mart.

Said Buckie to Mart, as they talked one day:
"From home and friends we are far away,
So for us two it's easy enough
The people to fool by a pious bluff,
Though 'twill bother us some to play the part.
Are you with me?" said Buckie. "You bet," said Mart.

Said Mart to Buckie, "If it's the same
To you, we'll join in a friendly game.
When I was at college, (now keep this dark)
I was known as a regular poker shark.
I'll ante a quarter, just for a start."
"I see you," said Buckie. "All right," said Mart.

Said Buckie to Mart: "When you offer prayer
And lead in chapel, I'll be there.
You come when I lead, for moral support,
Since piety isn't our strongest forte.
We'll fool them all, with a little art.
Lord help us," said Buckie. "Amen," said Mart.

The Choir.

It sounds like the deuce,
Even when at their best,
And though sad to relate,
'Tis true you'll confess.

Their notes most ungodly,
Unnerving and shrill,
Strike the poor, helpless student
With shudder and chill.

The hideous noises
These creatures produce,
Sound much like the wails
Of a monster broke loose.

Their efforts at singing,
Their rhythm, and tune,
Would worry to death,
The man in the moon.

If Orpheus, the charmer,
Should come back to-day,
And list to such music (?)
Just think what he'd say!

Oh! why are such freaks
Of music bereft,
Allowed to go free,
And bore us to death!

Instead of improving
It grows worse and worse,
And to our great sorrow,
Has become a fixed curse.

If they don't soon do better,
Or get up and git,
Every man in the college
Will pack up and flit.

M was the moon gone in to dream,
U the unruffled breast of the stream,
R the revolver, perhaps 'twas a gun,
D was the dreadful deed just done,
E was the evidence plainer than day,
R the rich joke when 'twas given away.

W was the way the scared children fled,
I was their ire when found they'd been "bled,"
L was the laugh next day they endured,
Long the account the papers procured.

O were the owls who were out that night,
U the unexplainable fight,
Try again, boys, the scheme worked all right.

To My Love.

Dearest, know a queen thou art,
Though thy throne is but my heart.
Though thy brow doth bear no gem
My kisses are thy diadem.

Though thy coffers hold no gold
Thou art rich with love untold.
At thy least behest doth fly
Thy most willing subject, I.

Past-time in Hulings.
Drawn from life by our Special Artist.

As It Was Done on Olympus.

THE faculty of the University of Alla Gehenna* are seated in their sanctum awaiting Some One's arrival. Suddenly the frou-frou of purple and fine linen is heard in the hall without. The door is opened by Somnus as the other demi-gods arrange themselves in a semi-circle. Through the portal sweeps the President, disguised as The Whole Thing. The demi-gods bow low in obeisance as The Whole Thing walks to a dais. There he faces his companions, his toad-like chest swelling as he raises his chin. He speaks amid oppressive silence:

"Say, this is I'm.
I think you all know
Where I have been.
Eight times the sun hath
Set since last this
Husky bunch
Got together. I want to tell you
We're very much Gen. Wood
When it comes to Reform.
We haven't done a thing to
Eta Mu Epsilon
Have we?
It makes me feel like a
Bull Moose
When I think about it."

The Whole Thing bursts into song as he finishes the touching tribute. In a soul-moving voice he sings, while Orpheus Flicks out the "Wearing of the Green" on the university piano:

*Webster's International—Gehenna: a torrid climate, a hot place; hell.

We've purified the atmosphere
And now the school is clean,
For ne'er a wight within my sight
Dares wear the black and green.

The rascals have been routed
And cannot vent their spleen,
Since ne'er a wight within my sight
Dares wear the black and green.

I'm another Savonarola,
My like has ne'er been seen,
Oh ne'er a wight within my sight
Dares wear the black and green.

The demi-gods can no longer restrain their enthusiasm. They shout in glad acclaim a chorus of Brek-e-kek-kek, co-ax, co-ax, and move the shade of Aristophanes—who has been listening over the long distance phone—to tears.

The Whole Thing bows indulgently, thereby disarranging his halo until it is tilted rakishly over one eye. He corrects the fault and calls for testimony from the demi-gods. Mercury slips a retort into his pocket and sings while beating time with a blow pipe, Orpheus playing "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo."—

As I walk around the campus
With my eagle eye unpealed,
I watch for skulking vandals
And have their deeds revealed.
Oh, 'tis then they sigh
And wish to die,
And make them murmur,
He's ace high.
I'm the man who helped to knife the rascals.

The Whole Thing nods approvingly. Hesperus arises, stroking his sunset beard. Cupid follows suit, laying several French and German texts upon his couch. They do a spirited cake walk with infinite skill and abandon until beads of ambrosial sweat streak their shining countenances. William sprays them with chlorides and they sing, the demi-gods whistling "For She's the Warmest Baby in the Bunch."—

When they see us coming
All the scoundrels take a chill,
Our aspect grim and frightful
Is prophetic of our skill.
We've routed them and flouted them
And bowed them to our will
With one determined punch.
We've snuffed it out, this worst of frats,
We've jabbed the hooks into their slats,
For we're the warmest babies in the bunch.

The Whole Thing chokes in his enthusiastic efforts to express his commendation. He is pounded on the back with a steam-hammer by Vulcan and recovers, after which he again sings, Orpheus playing "All Coons Look Alike to Me."—

All scamps are alike to me;
I reached their solar plexus, see?
But I'm just as b-i-g
As they ever hoped to be
And I put them o-u-t
And all must now agree
All scamps are alike to me.

The demi-gods interrupt by roaring out:

"And—you are our lu-lu,
Our own lu-lu.
We love you well;
Indeed we do.
You are our lu-lu,
Our own lu-lu.
We'd rather die
Than not have you."

Some one discovers after several hours of this that the trustees of Alla Gehenna really brought about the reformation and the continuous vaudeville performance comes to an untimely end.

To Dr. Hamnett.

A Sonnet.

His snowy hairs his lengthy life proclaim,
For like a silver crown they deck his brow.
No feeble age is his, no shrunken frame;
Erect and tall as ever stands he now.

His eyes are keen and bright; a kindly smile
Doth oft illumine his fine thoughtful face.
That face bespeaks a mind all free from guile,
Where wit and kindness struggle for first place.

The quick perception of the wrong or weak
Finds sharp expression in sarcastic speech;
The stores of wisdom, kindly nature speak
Fine lessons of right living unto each.

O! might thou ever live, so kindly gay,
Among thy well beloved books, alway.

The Self-made Man.

'Twas in a Co-ed college
That I first beheld his smile.
I was but a simple Freshie,
He had been there quite a while.
There he sat three seats behind me
And his tender eyes of blue
Gazing at me so intently
Pierced my very heart-strings through.
And his costume was so fetching—
Great expanse of shining white,
Large boutonniere, dark-blue sack coat,
Monocle to aid his sight,
Huge stick on the desk before him—
O! my brain was in a whirl!
Tall he rose, passed through the doorway—
A HORRID fin de siecle girl.

Descent of Woman.

Listen, while I to you relate,
The thrilling ride and the tragic fate,
That on a spring day did befall
A couple of girls from Huling s Hall.

They issued forth in costumes neat,
For a spin on their bicycles down the street,
On the sidewalk of which they happened to see
Prexie and two of the faculty.

Said B-ll to B-th: "Can we let this go,
So fine a chance our skill to show?"
At a scorching gait they started out.
(A pair of gaiters, without a doubt.)

And a warm appearance did they present,
As they sped with no fear of accident
Down College Hill, when they heard afar
The noise of a coming trolley car.

A panic invaded each gentle breast
(Their courage not proof to such a test)
And one of the twain, (I won't say which)
Dismounted suddenly into the ditch.

The Profs. had all rubbered around to look,
When the air with a loud concussion shook.
—A vision of tangled spokes and hair,
And pedal extremities in the air.

* * * * * * *

A moral must be appended here.
That this in the Kaldron may appear.
Haec fabula docet—On College Hill,
Don't try to scorch, or you'll get a spill.

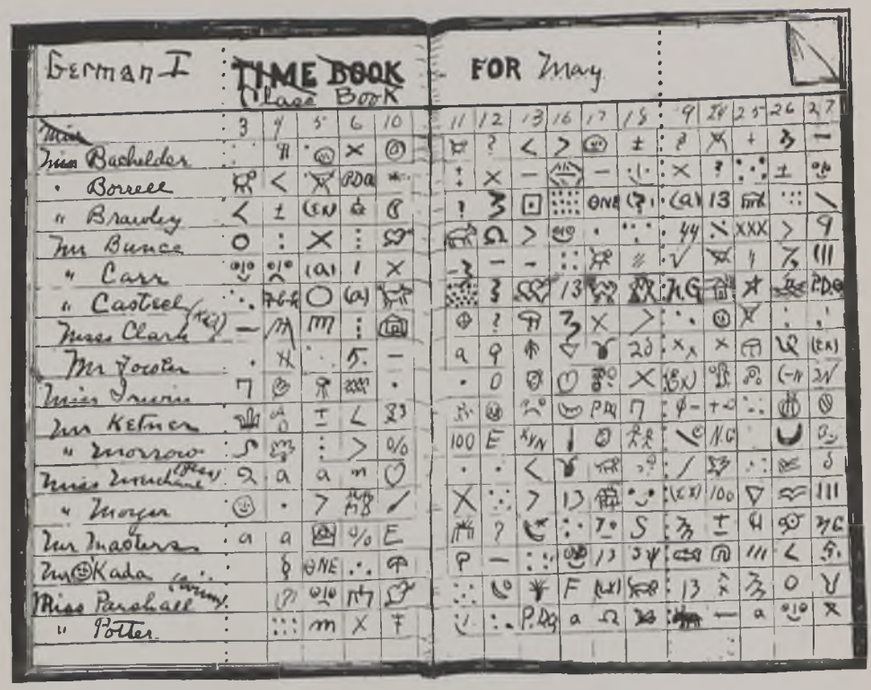

To William H.

'Ere's to you, Mr. Crawford,
An' the college on the 'ill!
You're a-makin' a success of her
An' we 'opes you always will!
She's old, but still feels gay
And she grows a bit each day.
'Ere's 'opin' that fer many years
You'll make 'er 'ave to grow!

'Ere's to your 'appy wisage
An' that 'ere bloomin' smile!
We sometimes finds some fault with you,
But still we likes your style!
You are mostly on the jump
An' are always on the 'ump,
'Ere's 'opin' that fer many years
You'll 'old your present job!

'Ere's to you, Mr. Prexie,
An' your bloomin' ready tongue,
'Ere's 'opin', though you may grow old,
You'll keep on feelin' young!
You've earned a first class rep,
So keep up your lively step.
'Ere's 'opin' that fer many years
You'll be pace-maker fer the school!

Kaldron Prize Puzzle.

To any person who will present an explanation of Dr. Thomas' marking system The KALDRON offers as a prize a trip to the Paris Exposition. (N. B.—We feel perfectly safe in doing this.)

The Ghost Dance.

'Twas the night of the reception,
The great president's reception,
When the Faculty and Seniors
For a nice time met together.
Mrs. Laffer, wide-experienced,
Had stayed home to watch o'er Hulings,
But the wicked, wicked maidens,
Stealing out by ways unnoticed,
Gathered sheeted down by Wilcox,
Ghosts so ghastly and so frightful,
E'en the moon was hid in terror,
For the night was damp and cloudy,
Just the time for foreign spirits
To return to torture mortals.
Round the house of joy they gathered,
Moaned and groaned in tones unearthly,
Danced their ghostly, weird old marches.
Though upon them fell hands earthly,
From their grasp the figures vanished.
Dr. Monty, sympathizing,
Brought out nectar and ambrosia.
Round the silent walks of campus
Slipped these spirits, gliding dimly,
Then into the halls of Hulings,
Melted as the mists in morning.

The Poster Girl.

We can't deny you 're stunning,
Though it seems too much like punning
To say that we 're made senseless by experience with you.
With your hair in bright confusion
You seem but a delusion,
A flaming, flaunting spirit, a bright dissolving view.

With the witchery entrancing,
Woven by your bright eyes glancing,
You can force all male creation to worship at your feet.
And your slaves whose chains tight bind them,
Lightly wear them, nor do mind them,
And never seem to think them as other than most sweet.

So we men whose hearts you capture
Are in ecstacies of rapture
O'er your eyes of blue so tender, and your gown of crimson flame,
Though even while we 're kneeling
We cannot help the feeling:
"May Providence deliver us from many of the same."

Ode to a Vegetable.

There is a young Prof. in the "Coll,"
Whose bigheadedness beats them all,
  What he says he thinks goes,
  But everybody knows
He's a bluffer just chuck full of gall.

He thinks he's three "Pease" in a pod,
As yet, though a youth quite unshod,
  The girls of the town
  Can scarce turn him down
For he's a warm one to turn down, by Gracious.

On the Sabbath he wears a silk tile,
And a big feeling grin just as vile.
  As he goes down the street
  He thinks he looks sweet,
But he misses his guess by a mile.

The Preps. his poor jokes almost kill,
Who laugh since they must, to fulfill
  The wishes of Pease,
  Who shakes to his knees,
And thinks he's a great joker still.

Next June we will bid him goodbye,
And regret(?) him, we 'll not meet on high—
  But we'll look down below,
  Where all bluffers go,
And rejoice in his red hot old fry.

How doth the busy June-bug
Improve each shining light;
He buzzes in so vigorously
Where'er the way is bright,
And makes the timid maiden jump
(The brave who will may smile,)
And scream when on her garments

Goodbye.

On Hulings stony steps we stand.
I long to press her little hand,
Cased in its dainty glove—but I,
I raise my hat and say goodbye.

One step above she stands, a sweet
Temptatation for our lips to meet.
She smiles farewell to me—but I,
I raise my hat and say goodbye.

I fain would there declare my love;
But—many windows stare above.
Prudence forbids, and therefore I—
I raise my hat and say goodbye.

An Extract,

From a Lecture by One of Our Profs.

When you compare two periods which are rather together or successively following one another right along consecutively, we find that the animals of the more recent period are quite different to what they are in this previous period back here, and that there is a continuous development that proceeds on right along from one period to another until the present period that we have now. The first were unicellular animals of one cell, and the difference that made the later multi-cellular animals, that came afterwards, different to these former one-celled ones, before, are due to different changes in these original cells.

Some cells absorb up different materials to others, some differentiate out and the contents within divide up and become segmented out and a part separates off. These changes were made by some change in the environments around by which they were caused and resulted from as a result.

There's one of the Profs. in the college,
Who with sugared words tries to beguile
Us to swallow a large dose of knowledge—
It is Smith, with the Sozodont smile.

He springs it at all times and places,
Wherever his phiz is on file,
The man of fashion and graces,
Prof. Smith, with his Sozodont smile.

"I could die happy, having seen so sweet a face."
—Miss Beecher.

"A Hart too deep for common minds to plumb." —John.

"All beardless sprigs, that favor dares admit amongst us."
—Freshmen.

A Poser.

Having through the whole year kept a close watch upon her,
The committee appointed will swear on their honor,
That Miss Spaulding has at least 84 distinct poses,
Which truly a wonderful genius discloses.

Now she will pose as a queen on a throne,
Now as a mermaid upon a cold stone,
And again she will take the peculiar position,
And the bright, winsome air of the ward politician.

She copies with care each gesture and look,
Whether of Venus, or Psyche, or Bridget the cook;
From Joan of Arc to Mary Ellen Lease,
She takes them off with the self same ease.

We may not like them all, but we 're bound to confess,
That as Trilby she scores a tremendous success:
If as queen of the posers she wishes to reign,
She should just pose as Trilby, the reason is plain.

"Old men like to give good advice to console themselves for being no longer able to give bad examples."
—Johnny Hamnett.

Two of a Kind.

Mr. Travis is a funny man,
His head is like a pump-kin;
Mr. Fornear is another man,
His stummick's like a dump-lin.

They both have mouths like cellar-doors,
Their lungs are good and strong;
And where e'er they go by night or day,
They take these mouths along.

Flunk.—"To die, to sleep no more."
Quiz.—"An inquiry into the conduct of the human understanding."
Allegheny.*—A proper place for proper young people (Christians given reduced rates).
Chapel.—A court of the inner temple, where the profs. and Prexie assemble for prayer, and the students for recreation.
Cut.—A self inflicted incision, which when too often indulged in frequently brings a student to a flunker's grave.

*Said to be derived from the Greek word "allos," another, and "gehenna," hell.

"There are some who, (not to flatter,
Though to say it seems unkind,)
Have a large per-cent of matter,
And a small per-cent of mind."
—R. C. Smith, Hammon and Frazier.

"Ay, speak to me of love." —Edith Griswold.

A reception to the faculty of the college is held on the 10th of every month from 9 to 12 in the morning and there is always a full attendance. The "favors" at these receptions are checks on the First National. Probably that is why the Profs. are always there.

"Behold! he spreadeth himself like a green bay-tree."
—Culbertson.

"One haughty glance of mine eye can conquer any man."
—Sabra Vought.

Exam.—A survival of that damnable mediæval institution—the Inquisition.

Horse.—The only animal sure-footed enough to conduct a man from ignorance into the blissful presence of the Senior twelve.

Hoss-sense.—One of the benefits of a classical education.

Senior.—Two arms, two legs, a trunk, and an empty thing on top.

Prex.—A thing which all colleges have, but which many would rather do without.

Freshman.—Fruit that has been picked too soon and palmed off on an unsuspecting public as a genuine article.

Prep.—An excresence on the epidermis of civilization.

Who is R. Meredith Rae, anyhow?

"Regally they spat and smoked
And fearsomely they lied."
—Kelly Club.

"All nature is nothing but mathematics." —Dutton.

A dear patient old soul; with one eye fixed on heaven, the other clinched on Prexie. —Maxwell.

"A rose between two thorns." —Monty in Chapel.

"On his brow he bears the genius stamp." —Prof. Bill.

"A well-curled pate, and witless tongue, perchance."

"Were ever convents with more beauty blessed?"
—Hulings Hall.

Mother Goose, for Freshmen.

One time the college had a "bat,"
In it were several men.
They marched them down the college hill
And marched them up again.

Now when these men perceived that work
By that they could not flim,
Each fellow sold or pawned his suit
To pay his fees in gym.

Sing a song of freshmen
Trying hard to cram
Math., and other things enough
To get them through exam.

When they saw the questions
Fled was all delight.
It didn't help them out a bit
That they'd sat up all night.

Bow-wow-wow
Whose dog art thou?
Dr. Monty's little dog,
Bow-wow-wow.

"Gas under constant pressure. —Stolzenbach.

"They backed their toughest statements with
The Brimstone of the Lord,
And crackling oaths went to and fro
Across the fist-banged board."
—Faculty Meeting.

"A happy, howling, hallelujah, heathen, but withal, a warm number." —Travis.

Simple Simon came to college
With the Freshman class.
Like some others of his mates
He is as green as grass.

Pussy's in the lab.,
Lying on a slab.
Who put her there?
Casteel, I declare.
What a naughty boy was that
Who caught and killed poor pussy-cat.

Our "Gym" Wright
Is a merry, merry wight,
And a merry, merry wight is he.
He called for his pipe
Ane he called for his bowl
And he called for his paste-boards three.

I had a little pony,
'Twas worth its weight in gold.
I lent it to a lady,
Whose name must not be told.

She rode it, and she rode it hard
Until, it must be said,
The prof. at last caught onto it
And flunked that lady dead.

Bald-headed thou wouldst be." —Jimmy Long.

"Tee! hee! how funny things seem to me! Tee! hee!"
—Nelle Sherred.

There was a Preceptress
Who lived in a Hall,
With many young ladies,
Fair and dark, short and tall.

They lived upon broth
And some slices of bread,
Each night at ten-thirty
They all went to bed.

Hark, hark, the dogs do bark,
The students are leaving town.
Some in rags and some with jags,
And some with cap and gown.

"Here's a crazy mob." —Preps.

He seems to love woman, yet shunneth her. A bad thing in a minister. —Swisher.

To Our New Arrivals.

Martin Smallwood.

A steam engine in trousers, just extricated from the debris of a disastrous wreck ; this is what you suggested when you made your debut in the refined circle of our college society. You gave us a cold, blood-curdling, refrigerated shiver when in a husky medical-college, cadaverous voice you said to your assistant: "Say, is there such a thing as a bone-saw around yere, anywheres?" Ugh! the hoar frost of your remarks, the statuesque inflexibility of your physiognomy, the unnatural shrinkage of your pantaloons, the unmistakable odor of new mown hay about your person, all produced an emotional effect too painful to describe.

The first civilized act you were guilty of was to sport a new suit of clothes; the "metamorphosism" was wonderful to behold. You had evidently contracted some virulent disease at Syracuse before you came here, a chronic case of megacephalosis. The generous application of cold water, assisted by the frequent use of a rasp, to your cranial protuberances will alleviate it somewhat and relieve your friends from any carking solicitude for your wellfare.

We haven't many criticisms to offer. Your moral character is unimpeachable. That Bible class racket is a pious idea; your exhortations in chapel are models of religious fervor and devotion; and we have no reason to doubt your sincerity.

We would advise a more frequent reference to Webster's International and also to that book facetiously called "Don't." "English as She Is Taught" might benefit you somewhat. Ruth Ashmore has ceased to exist; you can get no aid from her. As a substitute we suggest that you go to Alice Huntingdon Spalding for advice. We are afraid that your character is becoming smirched with too much acquaintance with a certain vicious, diminutive, stumpy, tawny-haired, rosy-cheeked reprobate from Massachusetts (this fair white page would blush at the mention of his name). Shun him; he, too, teaches a Bible class.

Don't ever attempt to teach that fossiliferous antedeluvian branch of natural science called Geology. Leave that to Monty; he can do that to perfection. You're too young and handsome to waste your valuable time trying to infuse geological intelligence into the impervious block-heads of a senior class. A chisel and mallet would be more becoming in your hand than any ten courses of epoch-making lectures you could ever fake out of a scientific magazine or book. Your future is still a thing to be guessed at.

"Gym" Wright.

A man with a (w)righteous name, a cluster of beautiful tawny locks, and a habit of slurring his r's, which gives to his mellifluous contralto a flavor ineffably ravishing and musical. Somewhere in the epithelial lining of his sawed-off personality he conceals that much-abused faculty of modern times, B-l-u-f-f, used on women and prayer meetings.

And to think he once ran a Chinese laundry in the classical state of Massachusetts!

H. H. WRIGHT,

Agent and Chief Clothes Wringer.

Mr. Wright, some people say you can't umpire a ball-game, but they're not "on to your curves." You have nerve. You're handsome, too. You like to have your picture taken. Readers will please count the number of times "Gym" has his "physiog" in The KALDRON. Be careful that your cherubic countenance does not some day adorn the photo case in the Rogue's Gallery.

Let "Mart" alone; he is young and far away from home and friends; he is easily led astray. Dr. Crawford doesn't like it. It isn't a bit nice in you. Good-bye.

Prof. Monroe.

We haven't much to say in your case. You have behaved very nicely, indeed. We are sorry that your conduct does not merit more extended criticism. You introduced the college song and also the college "sing." We thank you for it. It is one step forward.

Amphibious is the term some student applied to you, seeing you writing with both hands on the black board.

If we have slighted you, forgive us. We leave you to the tender mercies of next year's KALDRON.

Mr. Pease.

See page 144.

Prof. Smith.

Well, a disgracefully common name to begin with, but what's in a name! A polished exterior, a confident manner betokening wide experience, a smile that would melt butter. Your policy is very, very good, quite politic—you aim to please. You are interesting—ask the girls! You offended them at first; they thought you were trying to "jolly" them, but now they see how serious your intentions are. Be careful, they may be tampering with your affections.

You have "hoodooed" some of your classes. That History I. class reminds one of the inside of an air-pump receiver when all the gaseous matter has been extracted.

Now, Mr. Smith, say Italian, not Eye-talian. It is a violation of international courtesy to mispronounce the name of a foreign brother's nationality, besides it grates upon the teeth of our esthetic sense.

You give us mental dyspepsia and protracted attacks of aggravated ennui at times with too much note cramming. Be a man, read that famous and delightfully instructive volume, Gide's "Political Economy." It is broad and liberal in its treatment: in all very suggestive, but not a very good book for class use; it confuses the beginner. They don't use it at Johns Hopkins; Monty introduced it here and on that account we have used it ever since. You will find Walker's "Political Economy" very concise of statement and very suggestive. Marshall on "Political Economy" is simply fine. Read him during your summer vacation when you have nothing else to do. Above all things don't be a man of one book. Don't confine yourself to one author; think for yourself. Do a great deal of outside reading. Chew a little Macauley and Froude; swallow in large doses Bryce's "American Commonwealth," McCarthy's "Our Own Times," Lord's "Beacon Lights of History"; digest temperate infusions of Gardiner, Symonds, Hallam, Traill, Stubbs and Taswell-Langmead. Root around in our antedeluvian well-spring of literature and examine the handsome titles and bindings of those hundreds of rare works on history and religion, for which this institution has become famous. The best method of studying any subject is to read all the books you can on that subject; a text book is a thing to be despised. A beginner needs a library, not a single book.

Have you an assured livelihood?

Would you try for a government position, if you knew just how to apply, and the kinds of positions from which you can choose, and what to do to insure your getting on the list after you have applied?

The Government of the United States is the best of employers. Fair compensation, regularity of payment, reasonably sure tenure, tasks not too difficult, and hours not too long, offer strong attractions to young persons of both sexes who have no settled income. Many enter Government employ, spend their spare hours in studying law or medicine, or finance, and save enough from their salaries to start in a professional or business career.

We have just published a book from which any candidate may learn just what is necessary and what unnecessary in brushing up his studies for an examination; and what his chances are, all things considered, for making his way into the Civil Service, and staying there. The title of this book is "How to Prepare for a Civil Service Examination; With Recent Questions and Answers." It contains all information which any candidate would require to prepare for any competitive office under the Government, and includes a "Ten Weeks' Course of Study," in the form of questions actually asked at recent examinations, with the correct answers to them. Besides the technical requirements, it also covers all the elementary branches, like arithmetic, spelling, penmanship, geography, letter writing, civil government, etc., etc., so that one who masters this course of study would not only pass well an examination for a government position, but would be sure of preferment over other applicants for a clerkship in a business house.

The Book That Floored Kipling.

Some time ago a visitor to Rudyard Kipling's home was surprised, upon entering the library, to find that world-renowned story writer stretched on the floor on an Oriental rug and entirely absorbed in an open book. So great was the visitor's curiosity to discover what volume could so enthrall Rudyard Kipling that upon accomplishing his business he put the question. He was told, to his astonishment, that it was the dictionary named below, and learned furthermore not only that Kipling considered the particular work the most useful book of reference in existence, but that to him it was a fascinating, profitable study as well. It was in fact not what this greatest of modern word painters had seen, or heard, or experienced, that made him so phenomenally successful, but his constant effort to fit the right word into the right place.

Every year the publishers of this country send back hundreds of thousands of stories as unvailable. Why? It is not, as is popularly supposed, because their writers lack the material, the plot, the incident necessary for a Kipling story. Nearly every one finds in his every-day life material for as original, absorbing, successful, and money-bringing stories as any that have ever been written, but it is the lack of power to put it into fascinating form—to fit the right word into the right place, that leads to failure. Their diamonds may be among the finest in the world, but they are in the rough —they lack the form, the finish, the polish that command a ready market.

Guy de Maupassant, another of the greatest of modern story writers, has said: "When you have an idea there is only one noun to express it, one verb to enforce it, one adjective to qualify it." The secret of successful authorship depends npon finding that right noun, right verb, right adjective. To accomplish this, would-be writers have often spent years in studying other authors, and thus unconsciously surrendered what individuality they possessed by adopting the style and form of others. With a copy of the remarkable book, Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary, that so absorbed Kipling, any one of ordinary schooling who has a story to tell can teach himself to tell it—tell it well, tell it to sell. To any one interested in the subject of story telling for money, and in speaking and writing correctly, full particulars and specimen sheets of the new edition of the above-referred-to work (compiled by 247 of the most eminent scholars of the world at a cost of nearly one million dollars), which is now issued at $12. in one vol. full sheets, handsomely embossed, will be sent free by addressing Ward & Gow, 511, 513, 515 Lincoln Bldg., New York.

Highest Praise for the A. B. Chase Piano.

In all of the strife and clamor that exist in the piano trade of to-day, with the constant inroads of cheap goods, with the incessant disparagement of lofty aims, with the ceaseless attempt to market goods upon vainglorious claims, it is refreshing to turn to a piano like the A. B. CHASE. Here at least is a living, vital example of what can be accomplished by enthusiasm in the course of true musical endeavor: here is the result of the earnest, painstaking efforts of a body of men who have set their standard high above the ruck and rush of ordinary commerce, of men whose ideal is the best, the most lofty and the truest, of men who would rather retire from the field than debase the reputation they have so dearly earned.

Everyone who knows aught of the progress of piano perfection, knows of the striking accomplishments of the A. B. CHASE Company, and everyone who is appreciative of the better elements of piano building knows how valiantly the A. B. CHASE has maintained its lead during the long period of general debasement.

The A. B. CHASE piano is to-day the more significant, a better high-class musical instrument than it has ever been, and to say that is to give it the most sincere praise that ever a manufacturer of pianos has received in the columns of this paper
