

January 19, 1939

Dear Mr. Putnam:

Thank you for the trouble you have taken over the blurb. I understood, of course, that what was on the jacket was not final. I certainly like the revision you send much better, and I see no way to improve it excepting to correct the mis-statement about my being the only woman in my class. I was at the start but not at the finish. I dodged that as you will see on the corrected proof. Do as you think best about the other suggestions on the corrected proof. I am sure you will do something much better than I could. And I am sorry for the extra trouble I am making you.

Faithfully yours

Mr. A. J. Putnam
60 Fifth Avenue
New York City